PROLOGO.

SON tantos los Dicionarios de todos generos, y tan varios los particulares Prologos dellos, que ſera caſi impoſſible dezir algo en eſte, que no ſe aya dicho antes en algun otro; por lo qual, aquellos mal acondicionados, que deſſean ſer tenidos por Criticos, à coſta del credito de los que procuran en alguna manera ſer de algun util en eſta vida, comunicando lo que ſaben à los demas que àun no han alcançado el miſmo ſaber no dexaran de diffamar al eſcritor con el titulo de Plagiario. Por eſta, y otras no menos ſuſtanciales razones, ſe evitara toda prolixidad. Lo primero de que le parece al autor deſta obra advertir al letor es, que no ſe halla con baſtante caudal de vanidad, para engañar al mundo, alegando, que las ordenes preciſas de perſonas calificadas, y la importunidad de amigos, le han obligado a emprender eſte trabajo, eſſos motivos no han

PREFACE.

DICTIONARIES of all ſorts are ſo numerous, and the reſpective Prefaces to them ſo various, that it will be next to an impoſſibility to ſay any thing in this, that has not been before ſaid in ſome other, for which thoſe ill-natur'd perſons, who would be thought Criticks, at the expence of the reputation of ſuch as endeavour to be ſome way ſerviceable in their generation, by imparting what they know to the reſt that have not yet attain'd the ſame knowledge, will be ready to revile the Writer with the title of a Plagiary. For this, and other no leſs ſubſtantial reaſons, all prolixity ſhall be here avoided. The firſt thing the compiler of this Work thinks fit to acquaint the Reader with is, that he has not the vanity to impoſe upon the publick, by telling them, the commands of great men, and the importunity of friends have han llegado à inducirle: Ningun gran perſonage conoce, cuya generoſidad alcance à ſoportar ſemejante empleo, ni huviera ſido facil perſuadirle amigos pretendidos, que ſe tomaſſen la libertad de aconſejarle que ſe impuſieſſe tan trabajoſa tarea, ſin moſtrarle el fruto que avia de ſacar della. Solos los libreros han prevalecido, los quales echando de ver que no ſe hallava un Dicionario Eſpañol, concluyeron que el ſacar uno à luz les ſeria provechoſo, y por algunas razones le juzgaron capaz de cumplir lo que deſſeavan, y conformemente ſe lo propuſieron en terminos que le parecieron razonables. Eſto es hablar claro; los demas ſon ſolo pretextos vanos, dictados por la preſuncion, pues no obſtante todas las falſedades que publican para encubrir ſu avaricia; los mas realçados perſonages no aſpiran à mas que ſu interes, y los mas aplaudidos defenſores de ſus patrias las huvieran dexado perecer, ſino ſe engrandecieran à ſi por los miſmos medios con que procuran engaytar el mundo, como ſi fueran effetos de un zelo puro por el bien de ſus dichas patrias.

oblig'd him to undertake this work, thoſe motives have been remote from him, he is a ſtranger to any mighty perſons who have ſo much generoſity as to encourage ſuch an undertaking, and would not eaſily comply with ſuch pretended friends as ſhould take the liberty to put him upon ſuch a laborious task, without ſhowing him what account it would turn to. The only inducement he has had, hav been from the Bookſellers, who finding a demand for a Spaniſh Dictionary, concluded it would be for their advantage to print one, and for ſeveral reaſons judg'd him capable of anſwering their expectation, and accordingly propos'd to him ſuch terms as he thought fit to accept of. This is plain dealing, all other pretences are but empty notions inſpir'd by vainglory, when whatſoever falſehood they give out to palliate their avarice, all that the greateſt men really aim at is nothing but their intereſt, and the moſt celebrated patriots would ſuffer their country to periſh, did they not raiſe themſelves by that which they would have thought a zeal to ſupport it.

En lo que toca à eſte Dicionario, ni ſe puede eſperar que el autor hable con deſprecio de ſu obra, lo qual fuera contrario à nueſtro natural, pues todos en general tienen algun amor à lo que han producido; ni le eſtà bien alabarla, lo qual no dexara de parecer muy grande arrogancia, contra todas reglas de modeſtia,

As to this Dictionary, neither can the Author be expected to ſpeak meanly of his performance, which would be unnatural, all men being apt to have ſome eſteem for their own productions, nor may he preſume to extol it, becauſe that would juſtly be look'd upon as a notable piece of arrogancy, againſt all the rules of deſtia, y por conſiguiente antes fuera quitar que añadir à ſu eſtimacion. Eſto ſe puede affirmar con verdad, y ſin incurrir cenſura, à ſaber, que es el mas copioſo de quantos haſta aora han ſalido à luz, por quanto todos los que eſtavan antes impreſſos en varias lenguas, y ſe pudieron aver por dinero, han ſido repaſſados, para las adiciones, como ſe puede echar de ver en eſte, por eſtar los autores citados, quando algunas palabras parecen dudoſas. Ademas, el autor eſtos años paſſados ha leydo muchos libros Eſpañoles, que no avia viſto antes, ſin omitir coſa que ſe hallaſſe en ellos propria para ſus adiciones, nombrando los eſcritores, quandoquiera que las palabras de que ſe ſirven ſe apartan mucho del eſtilo de los mas modernos, ô del que al preſente ſe uſa en converſacion. Acerca de lo qual ſe ha de reparar, que en la lengua Eſpañola ſe han admitido mas novedades, deſde el tiempo que ſe inſtituyeron academias en aquella nacion, y que ha ſido tan grande y tan familiar el comercio con Francia, por razon de aver admitido un Rey Frances, que en dozientos años antes de aquellos dias, de manera que al preſente ſe halla una multitud de palabras nuevamente forjadas, de que no avia noticia alguna antes deſte ſiglo en que eſtamos. Eſcuſado ſera aqui enſeñar à los que aprenden, el ſonido y pronunciacion de todas las letras del alphabeto, por quanto las hallaran perfetamente explicadas en ſus particulares y pro- of modeſty, and conſequently rather leſſen than add to its eſteem. This may be aſſerted with truth, and without incurring any cenſure, viz. that it is the moſt copious of any yet extant, in regard that all thoſe which were publiſh'd before in ſeveral languages, and could be purchas'd, have been conſulted, to make the improvements, as may appear upon peruſal, their ſeveral authors being quoted, where any words are liable to be call'd in queſtion. Beſides, the compiler has read many Spaniſh authors of late, which he had not ſeen before, and omitted nothing he could find in them, that was proper to be added, mentioning them particularly where the terms they uſe ſeem to deviate very much from the ſtile of the more modern authors, or what occurs in common converſation. Wherein it is to be obſerv'd, that the Spaniſh language has receiv'd greater alteration ſince the erecting of academies in that nation, and the great and familiar intercourſe with France, upon their admitting of a French king, than it did in two hundred years before that time, ſo that there is now a multitude of new fram'd Spaniſh words, which were utterly unknown before this preſent century. It will be needleſs to inſtruct learners here in the Spaniſh way of ſounding and pronouncing the ſeveral letters of the alphabet, becauſe they will find the ſame in their proper and reſpective places, fully explain'd, after the moſt

y proprios lugares, en el modo mas inteligible, porque algunas dellas ſon muy differentes de lo que ſe uſa en Ingles, pero en lo general concuerdan con el Latin, del qual el Eſpañol trae ſu origen, y la ſemejança que le tiene es tan grande, que el que tuviere algun razonable conocimiento del primero podra con brevedad aprender el ſegundo. La mayor differencia conſiſte en algunas palabras que introduxeron los Godos y los Alarabes mientras fueron ſeñores de Eſpaña, los quales tambien hizieron alguna mudança en la pronunciacion: à lo qual ſe puede añadir lo que ſe tocò arriba, acerca de las palabras que ſe han introducido de nuevo deſde la grande correſpondencia con Francia, y algunas pocas tomadas de la lengua Italiana. Las mas deſtas ultimas ſe hallan principalmente entre la gente culta, Narciſſos y Damas remilgadas, que aman hablar un lenguage, que muchas vezes ni ellos, ni los que los oyen entienden, como lo vemos demaſiadamente praticado en Inglaterra, adonde no ſon menos apetecidas las palabras noveles, aunque aya otras viejas proprias de mayor ſignificacion; y à la verdad, no es menos enfadoſo que ridiculo el oyr hombres ignorantes, y mugeres tontas que ſe canſan por dar à conocer ſu poco ſeſo en una gerigonça, que no ay quien la entienda.

most intelligible manner, ſeveral of them differing very much from what is uſual in Engliſh, but moſt generally agreeing with the Latin, from which the Spaniſh derives its original, and ſo much reſembles it, that any one who is knowing in the former may ſoon make himſelf maſter of the latter. The greateſt difference conſiſts in ſome few words introduc'd by the Goths and the Arabs, whilſt they rul'd in Spain, who alſo vary'd the pronunciation; to which may be added, what was hinted before, of the new coin'd words ſince the extraordinary intercourſe with France, and ſome few borrow'd from the Italian. Moſt of theſe laſt are chiefly in uſe among the affected part of the nation, Beaus and Bels, who are fond of delivering themſelves in ſuch a language, as very often neither they, nor their hearers underſtand, as we ſee too often practi'sd in England, where we are no leſs fond of new coin'd words, tho' we have old ones more ſignificant of our own; and it is no leſs provoking than ridiculous to hear ignorant men and ſilly women labouring to expoſe their nonſenſe in an unintelligible jargon.

Los verbos irregulares van todos conjugados, haſta donde llegan ſus irregularidades,

The irregular verbs are all conjugated, as far as their irregularities extend, which laridades, lo qual ſera de mucho util à los que han meneſter ſervirſe dellos; otras coſas que ſe encaminan por reglas ciertas, ſe han de aprender, ô por la grammatica, ô la coſtumbre, como no pertenecientes à eſta obra. Son tantos los refranes y las fraſes Eſpañolas, que los curioſos apenas hallaran alguna ſentencia, ô en libros, ô en converſacion, que no eſté aqui baſtantemente explicada. El lenguage deſte Dicionario es el miſmo que ſe habla en la corte de Eſpaña, y entre toda la gente acendrada de aquella nacion, y por conſiguiente el miſmo que ſe halla en todos ſus eſcritores mas afamados; y adonde ocurrieren otras palabras, ſiempre llevan ſu nota de que ſon antiguas, ô particulares de algunas provincias; y ſe ha de reparar que la miſma lengua es univerſal en toda aquella immenſa monarchia, à ſaber, en todas partes de las Indias Occidentales, las Iſlas Philipinas, &c. con ſola alguna poca differencia en la pronunciacion, en provincias muy remotas, como ſe vee en otros reynos. Verdad es que ay una lengua particular en Biſcaya, que ſe habla entre aquella gente, pero apenas ſe halla alguno que no hable Eſpañol. Lo miſmo ſe puede dezir de Cataluña, adonde tambien tienen una meſcla del antiguo Frances, ô lenguage Limoſin, y el Eſpañol que ya paſſó, pero la lengua univerſal ſiempre ſe conſerva entre todos eſtados. Eſto baſtara para evitar la repeticion de lo mucho que otros han dicho, y para no enfadar al lector.

is a conſiderable help to all that have occaſion to make uſe of them; other things that are according to the eſtabliſh'd rules, muſt be learnt either by grammar or uſe, as not appertaining to this work. The Spaniſh proverbs and phraſes are ſo numerous, that the curious can ſcarce fail of finding any thing thoroughly explain'd, which may occur to them either in reading, or converſation. The language of this Dictionary is the ſame that is ſpoken at the court of Spain, and by all the polite perſons of that nation, and conſequently the ſame that is found in all their moſt celebrated authors; for where other words occur, they are always noted as obſolete, or peculiar to ſome provinces; and it is to be obſerv'd, that the ſame is univerſal throughout that great monarchy, that is, in all parts of the Weſt Indies, the Philippine Iſlands, &c. only allowing ſome ſmall difference in the pronunciation in remote provinces, as is uſual in all other countries. It is true, there is a peculiar language in Biſcay, ſpoke among thoſe people, yet there are ſcarce any of them that do not ſpeak Spaniſh. The ſame may be ſaid of Catalonia, where they alſo uſe a compoſition of old French or Limoſin, and antiquated Spaniſh, but ſtill the univerſal tongue is preſerv'd among all degrees of people. This may ſuffice to avoid repeating too much of what has been ſaid by others, and tiring the patience of the reader.

DICIONARIO NUEVO ESPAÑOL y INGLES.

A New SPANISH and ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

A A

A, The firſt letter of the alphabet, and the firſt of the vowels, as ſtanding in need of no other to be pronounced, as the conſonants do. In Spaniſh it is pronounced as in Latin, that is, opening the mouth; as in the words all, hall, &c. not as in the words hard, bard, and others of that kind. The Greeks call it Alpha, the Hebrews Aleph, the Arabs Aliph, the Phœnicians Alioz, the Indians Alephu, and ſo other nations.

A is the beginning of Spaniſh verbs form'd out of nouns, as alanceár, abraſár, acarreár, from lánça, bráſa, cárro, &c.

A, a prepoſition, to, at, towards.

A, an adverb, a way of calling, as A Juán, Ho there John; alſo a note of reprehenſion, as A traviéſſo, O unlucky one!

A, a verb, the third perſon ſingular of the verb e, or he; as Yo he, I have; Tu has, Thou haſt; El ha, or a, He has.

A ſometimes ſtands for áy; as Múchos días a, many days ſince.

A denotes the dative caſe, as Dádlo a Pédro, give it to Peter; ſometimes the accuſative, as ámo a Diós, I love God; and ſometimes the infinitive mood, as Vóy a comér, I go to eat.

AARO'N, o Bárba de Aarón, the herb wake-robbin, or calves-feet; alſo the proper name Aaron.

A B A

A'BA, take heed, beware,; as 'Aba el lóbo, take heed of the wolf.

ABABO'L, a poppey. Vid. Amapóla.

ABACA'RES, a nation in South America.

A'BACO, the abacus, is a quadrangular piece, commonly accompanied with a cymatium, and ſerving inſtead of a corona, or drip to the capital, whereof it is the ſuperior or higheſt part; that is, it ſupports the lower face of the architrave. So call'd from the Greek abacion, which ſignifies a ſquare trencher or table.

ABACO'A, one of the Lucayan iſlands of America, 12 leagues long, and hardly half a league broad.

ABA'D, an Abbat, chief of a monaſtery of Monks of the orders of St. Benedict, St. Bernard, St. Baſil, and ſome others. In Spain ſome houſes of Canons Regular have Abbats. In the country in Spain they alſo in many places call the Parſon of the pariſh, Abad. It is derived from the Hebrew Aba, ſignifying a father, ſuperior, or maſter.

Prov. El Abád de dónde cánta yánta: Where the Abbat ſings, there he gets his dinner. To ſignify that churchmen are to live by their function.

Prov. Comó cánta el Abád, reſpónde el monacíllo: As the Abbat ſings, ſo the Acolyte, or the Clerk anſwers. To adviſe men to good breeding; becauſe tho' a man be a ſuperior, if he gives bad language, he may meet with worſe. Our ſcolds ſay, I gave her as good as ſhe brought, much to the ſame effect.

Prov. De cáſa del Abád, comér y llevár: At the Abbat's houſe eat and carry away. To ſhew the great hoſpitality of Abbats and churchmen, and eſpecially their charity to the poor, who have enough to eat and carry away.

Prov. Abád y Balleſtéro: An Abbat and Croſs-bow-man, or, as we now ſay, a Gunner. A reflection upon churchmen, who preſume, contrary to the canons, to follow hunting, or ſuch like ſports. A general term to expreſs a ſcandalous churchman.

Prov. Adelánte eſtá la cáſa del Abád: The Abbat or the Curate's houſe is farther on. An uncharitable way of refuſing any thing that is asked, as laymen us'd to do by pilgrims, or other poor, ſending them away to the Curate's or Religious Houſes.

Prov. Abád avárіento por un bodígo piérde ciénto: A covetous Curate loſes an hundred loaves or cakes to get one. This is when the Curate quarrels with a pariſhioner for not offering, and he never offers after. Not unlike, All covet, all loſe.

Prov. Abád de çarçuéla comíſtes la ólla, pedís la caçuéla: Curate of çarçuéla eats up the pot, and asks for the pipkin. This was ſome very hungry curate of that place, from whom it became a proverb, applied to any man that has had much, and ſtill covets more.

Prov. Abád halaguéro, teníd el cuéllo quédo: Fawning Abbat, hold your neck ſtill. Applied to any man that is over ceremonious, cringing, and fawning, and uſes many indecent actions with his head.

Prov. Quándo el Abád láme el cuchíllo, mal pára el monacíllo: When the Curate licks the knife, it's bad for the Acolyte or Clerk. It's a ſign the commons are ſhort: and when the maſter fares ill, it muſt be worſe with the ſervant.

S. ABA'D, a port in the great iſland of California, on the back of North America.

ABA'DA, a beaſt in the Eaſt-Indies of a great bulk, cover'd with a ſort of ſhells or ſcales like armour, and proof againſt any weapon, and having one horn in the forehead; commonly call'd a Rhinoceros.

ABADE'JO, that ſort of ſalt-fiſh we call Poor Jack; the bird call'd a Wagtail; and the fly we call the Spaniſh Fly, or Cantharis, us'd for raiſing bliſters.

ABADE'NGO, belonging to an Abbat; the territory belonging to an Abby.

ABADE'SA, an Abbeſs of a Monaſtery of religious women.

ABADÍA, the dignity of an Abbat, or an abby.

ABAHA'DO, cloſe cover'd, ſo that the ſteam is kept in.

ABAHA'R, to cover cloſe, to keep in ſteam, and therefore ſometimes uſed for ſtifling, becauſe that keeps in the breath. From báho, the ſteam.

ABAJA'R, vid. Abaxár.

ABAI'BES, a ridge of high mountains in South America.

ABA'JO, vid. Abáxo.

ABALA'DO, Obſ. looſe, puffy, not lying cloſe.

ABALANÇA'DO, put or thruſt forward, hazarded.

ABALANÇADO'R, one that thruſts forward, or hazards.

ABALANÇA'R, Preſ. Abalánço, abalánças, abalánça; Imperf. Abalançáva; Pret. Abalancé, abalançáſte, abalançó; Imp. Abalánça; to put forward, to venture, to hazard; ſaying or doing any thing without conſideration. From the Greek ballo, to caſt or throw.

ABALDONA'DO, reproach'd, ill ſpoken of; alſo as Abandonádo, abandon'd, forſaken.

ABALDONA'R, to taunt, to caſt reproaches upon one, to give ill language. From baldón, a reproachful word. It is alſo found ſometimes for Abandonár, to abandon or forſake.

ABALLA'R, to move any thing with difficulty, to put away with force.

ABALORIO'S, bugles.

ABA'NA, vid. Havana.

Acharſe al água; verbatim, to leap into the water; metaphorically, to launch out, to venture upon any thing that is difficult or dangerous.

A'y más déſſo que de água, there is more of that than of water. To expreſs the great plenty of it, that nothing is more common.

No dár un járro de água, not to give a pitcher of water. That is, to give nothing, to be niggardly in the higheſt degree.

Prov. Faltárle ha el água: He will want water. To ſignify an idle lazy perſon, that can get nothing; or one ſo unfortunate, that nothing ſucceeds with him.

Prov. Dále el água a la bóca: The water is up to his mouth. He is in the utmoſt danger.

Prov. No vále ſus oréjas llénas de água: He is not worth his ears full of water. That is, worth nothing, ſince nothing ſo cheap as water, and no leſs quantity than what a man can hold in his ears.

Prov. Baylár el água delánte: To dance with the water before one. That is, to be very nimble or quick in performing one's duty, or pleaſing another. Taken from the maids watering the rooms and courts in Spain in hot weather againſt their maſters come, doing it nimbly, as if they were dancing, as they carry and ſcatter the water before them.

Prov. Llevár el água a ſu molíno: To carry the water to his own mill. That is, to turn all things to one's own advantage.

Prov. Tenér el água a la garganta: To be up to the neck in water. To be in imminent danger.

Prov. Deſeádo cómo água de máyo: Wiſh'd for like rain in May. This they ſay of any thing they earneſtly deſire or covet, becauſe in Spain rain in May fills the corn, and prevents any ſcarcity, which often follows a dry May, and is good for the vineyards.

Prov. A'gua de márço peór que máncha en páño: March rain is worſe than a ſpot in cloth. Becauſe the ſpot may be taken out, but the rain that falls in March ſpoils the corn ſo that is cannot be retriev'd.

Prov. A'gua fría ſárna cría, água róxa ſárna eſcóſca: Cold water breeds the itch, red water cures the itch. That is, cold water is unwholſome, but wine, ſignify'd by red water, cures diſeaſes. A good fellow's proverb. We ſay, Water breeds frogs in the belly, and wine kills the worms.

Prov. A'gua fría y pan caliénte nínca hicieron buén viéntre: Cold water and hot bread never did well in the belly. There is another to this ſame purpoſe below.

Prov. A'gua al hígo, y a la péra víno: Water to the fig, and wine to the pear. That is, drink water with the fig, and wine with the pear; becauſe they reckon the fig of a hot nature, and the pear cold.

Prov. A'gua de máyo, pan pára tódo el áño: Rain in May is bread for all the year. That is, it fills and brings up the corn, ſo that there is a plentiful harveſt, and no want all the year.

Prov. A'gua fría y pan caliénte máta la génte: Cold water and hot bread kill people. That is, they are both unwholſome.

Prov. A'gua de por San Juán quíta víno, y no da pan: Rain about midſummer ſpoils the wine, and does not mend the corn. It being then harveſt in Spain, the corn receives no advantage, and the grapes at that time have need of fair weather to ripen them, whereas much rain rots them.

Prov. A'gua de cépas y orinál, te pondrán en el hoſpitál: Water of the vines and the urinal will carry you to the hoſpital. That is, drunkenneſs, ſignified by water of the vine, which is no other than wine, will make you diſeas'd; and the urinal, by which is ſignified the charge of doctors and apothecaries will impoveriſh you, ſo that you will come at laſt to the hoſpital.

Prov. A'gua ni enférma, ni embeóda, ni adéuda: Water neither makes ſick, nor drunk, nor impoveriſhes.

Prov. Á'gua trotáda túnto val cómo cevádа: Water that has been trotted over is as good as barley. That is, it is good for horſes to drink water that has been diſturbed, as generally counted better than the cleareſt.

Prov. Á'gua mála hervída y coláda: Bad water muſt be boil'd and ſtrain'd. That is, to make it pure and wholſome.

Prov. Á'gua ſóbre pólvo, y yélo ſóbre tódo: Water upon duſt, and froſt upon both. This, they ſay, is good to bring up the corn; that is, plentiful rain after the ſummer's drought, and then nipping froſts in winter to kill weeds, and keep the corn back.

Prov. Á'gua de agóſto, azafrán, y miél, y móſto: Rain in Auguſt produces ſaffron, honey, and wine.

Prov. Á'gua ſóbre água, ni vále ſáyo, ni cápa: Neither cloak nor coat will hold out againſt rain upon rain. That is, when repeated ſhowers fall upon wet cloaths, they cannot hold out. Or metaphorically, when misfortunes come one upon the neck of another, there is no withſtanding them.

Prov. Á'gua abáxo a la contína, atinarás a la marína: Keep always down along with the water, that is, the river, and you'll hit the way to the ſeaſide. That is, follow always the ſure way, as rivers certainly run to the ſea, and, tho' it be long, you will certainly come to your intended end.

Prov. Á'gua ſóbre água, ni cúra ni láva: Water upon water neither cures nor waſhes. That is, too much of one thing is good for nothing.

Prov. Á'gua vertída no tóda cogída: Water that is ſpilt cannot all be taken up. What is profuſely and laviſhly thrown away can never be gather'd up again.

Prov. Á'gua de ſiérra, y ſómbra de piédra: Water of the mountain, and ſhade of ſtone. That is, they are the beſt, as water that runs from rocky hills, and the ſhade of a ſtone wall better than that of trees.

Prov. Á'gua y ſol pára las huértas es lagárta, y pára las viñas pulgón: Rain and ſunſhine are caterpillars in orchards, and worms in vineyards. That is, much rain with hot ſunſhine gleams between, deſtroy both orchards and vineyards, and breed inſects and worms that devour them.

Prov. Á'gua cóge con harnéro quién ſe crée de ligéro: He takes up water in a ſieve who is eaſy of belief. That is, he is deceiv'd, and labours in vain, who credits every thing he hears.

Prov. Del água mánſa me guárde Diós, que de la brúva me guardaré yó: God defend me from the ſtill water, for I'll keep my ſelf from the rough. That is the plain ſenſe, God keep me from being allured to go upon the water when it is fine and ſmooth, and ſo running my ſelf into danger; for when I ſee the water rough, and ſtormy weather, I'll be ſure to keep off it. But the figurative ſenſe is, God defend me from fawning and fair-ſpoken deceitful people, who ſeem all ſaints without, and are devils within; for I ſhall my ſelf take care to avoid thoſe that are publickly boiſterous or ſcandalous.

Prov. Aóra hervía, y yá es água fría: Juſt now it boiled, and now it is cold water. Metaphorically of one that is in a great heat or paſſion, and is frighted into a ſudden calmneſs.

Prov. Con água paſſáda no muéle molíno: The mill does not grind with water that is run by. What is paſt can do us no kindneſs.

Prov. Del água mánſa te guárda, que la récia préſto ſe páſſa: Take heed of a ſoft rain, for that which falls violent is ſoon over. This is true in the plain ſenſe of the words, but metaphorically ſignifies, you muſt have a care of patient men, who are not eaſily mov'd, but, when anger'd, hold it long; for cholerick haſty perſons are generally ſooneſt appeaſed.

Prov. El água ſin colór, olór, ni ſabór: Water muſt have neither colour, taſte, nor ſmell.

Prov. Mas vále un água éntre abríl y máyo, que los buéyes y el cárro: A good ſhower of rain betwixt April and May is worth more than the cart and oxen. That is, to ſhow how ſeaſonable rain is in April and juſt the beginning of May.

Prov. No os lavaréis déſta con quánta água áy en el río: You will not waſh away this ſtain with all the water in the river. You'll never wipe off this ſtain.

Prov. Mas vále água del ciélo, que tódo el riégo: Water from heaven, that is, rain, is better than any watering. Experience ſhows this to be true.

Prov. No éches água en la ſal, que te ſaldrá mal: Do not throw water into ſalt, for it will turn to an ill account. That is, do not provoke your friends, leſt you loſe them.

Prov. Por túrbia que eſté, no dígas déſta água no beberé: Tho' it be never ſo much troubled, do not ſay I will not drink of this water. That is, tho' a thing be never ſo mean, do not ſay I will never ſtoop to it, or I ſhall never be in ſuch a mean condition, ſince nothing is certain in this life.

Prov. Quién écha água en la garráfa de gólpe, mas derráma que élla cóje: He who pours water into a bottle haſtily ſpils more than goes in. That is, he who is too raſh and haſty in his buſineſs does more harm than good. The more haſte the worſe ſpeed.

AMBA'R, o Ambargrís, ambergriſe, the wholſomeſt and moſt delicious of all perfumes, but what it is, is not yet known, ſome affirming it to be the ſperm of the whale, others the dung of ſome creature in the ſea, or the foam condens'd; and others, that it flows from ſome ſource in the ſea; and others, that it grows in the ſea as the fungi do on ſtones or trees, and is caſt up up by the ſea in ſtormy weather. The beſt amber is that which is light, and of a clear grey or aſh-colour, and the blacker the worſe it is. The rich Moors and Indians uſe much amber, and the Chineſes much more, eſteeming it good for the brain and ſtomach, and as a provocative. It is hot and dry in the ſecond degree. It ſtrengthens the brain and heart, comforts weak limbs, ſharpens the underſtanding, enlivens the ſenſes, reſtores the memory, removes melancholy and obſtructions in the matrix, is good againſt the palſy, falling-ſickneſs, and convulſions, corrects infectious air, and very much helps old people, and thoſe that are of cold conſtitutions. Chriſ. Acoſt. nat. hiſt. E. Ind.

Ambár is alſo the yellow amber, of which we have beads and other curioſities.

A'MBARES, the fruit of a large tree in India, with long narrow leaves, which are of a light pleaſant green, and full of veins, that make it beautiful. The flower or bloſſom is white and ſmall, the fruit as big as a green walnut, the colour a lighter green, and the taſte harſh; but when ripe it turns yellow, has a better ſmell, and the taſte is a pleaſant tartneſs. The pulp of it is hard, conſiſting of many ſinews knit in a maſs. It ſerves to make ſauce to meat, being tart; and when ripe is eaten with ſalt and vinegar, and will keep ſo a long time. It creates an appetite, and the Indians reckon it good againſt choler. Chriſt. Acoſt. nat. hiſt. E. Ind.

AMBE'RES, the city Antwerp in the Low Countries.

AMBÍA, a liquor in Peru, which flows from a ſpring near the ſea, of the colour and conſiſtence of honey, and ſmelling lide Tacamahaca. It cures inveterate diſeaſes proceeding from cold cauſes, and takes away all aches and pains of that nature. It ſeems hot in the third degree, and very viſcous. Monardes, fol. 108.

Amór de hortelâno, the plant called burdocks.

Prov. Amór de níña, o de níño, água en céſto: Childrens love is water in a basket. That is, it ſoon paſſes away, like water taken up in a basket.

Prov. Amór de mónja fuégo de eſtópa: Nuns love is like a fire of tow. That is, very hot, yet is but a blaze, no ſooner kindled than dead; for being only a little talk through a grate, as it comes lightly, as lightly it paſſes away.

Prov. Amór de pádre, o de mádre, que tódo lo ótro es áyre: A father's love, or a mother's, for all other love is like wind. The love of parents is ſo ſincere, ſo paſſionate, and ſo diſintereſted, that all other love compared to it ſeems but mere wind and vanity.

Prov. Amór lóco, yó por vos, y vos por ótro: Mad love, I follow you, and you follow another. This expreſſes the folly of love, when a man loves and follows a woman who he knows has placed her heart elſewhere.

Prov. Amór trompéro (o amór meſonéro) quántas véo, tántas quiéro: Inconſtant love, running round like a top, all I ſee I love. It expreſſes the folly of ſome men, who court and make love to all the women they meet; comparing their love to a top, which the more it is whipp'd, the more it turns round; ſo they, the more they are ſcorned and flurted at, the more they turn to vent their folly. It is alſo call'd meſonéro, that is, the love of an inn, where wenches pretend to love all comers and goers.

Prov. Amór de ſeñór, amór de burón: A lord or a great man's love is like a ferret's love. That is, the love great men pretend, is only to compaſs their deſigns; their intention is to play the ferret, to ruine you, and then leave you.

Prov. Amór de mónja, y fuégo de eſtópa, y viénto de cúlo, tódo es úno: Nuns love, fire made of tow, and wind of the arſe, is all alike. Part of this proverb was mentioned above, and explain'd; this is the ſame, with only the addition, that to love nuns is not worth a fart.

Prov. Amóres nuévos olvídan viéjos: New love makes the old be forgot. One nail drives out another.

Prov. Amóres nuévos cáſa con puchéros: New love is like a houſe full of pipkins. That is, it ſtands upon tickliſh terms, it is eaſy to be broke. Otherwiſe, love is ſo expenſive, that it reduces the lover from a good pot of meat to a pipkin. Or elſe it may be taken in that ſenſe where hazér puchéros ſignifies to make faces, as children do when they cry; ſo amorous young fops make many ugly faces, and ſometimes ſhed tears for their miſtreſſes.

Prov. Amóres, dolóres, y dinéros, no pueden eſtár ſecrétos: Love, pain, and money cannot be kept private.

Prov. El amór de Dios floréce, tódo lo al peréce: The love of God flouriſhes, all other things periſh. A religious proverb, to expreſs the uncertainty of the things of this world, and perſuade the love of God, which is the only certain good.

Prov. El amór de los áſnos éntra a cózes y a bocádos: The love of aſſes is beaten in with kicking and biting. A reproof for boiſterous lovers.

Prov. El amór y la guadáña quiéren fuérça, y quiéren máña: Love and the ſcythe require force and art. That is, it is requiſite in love to uſe importunity, ſignify'd by force, and induſtry or art at the ſame time, as well as in mowing, where a man, tho' never ſo ſtrong, cannot manage a ſcythe, unleſs he has the knack of it.

Prov. Los amóres del gâto riñéndo éntran: Cats love begins by quarrelling. As we daily ſee in catterwawling. This is to the ſame effect as that above of the aſs.

Prov. Un amór ſáca ótro: One love drives out another. The ſame as that above, Amóres nuévos olvidán viéjos.

Prov. Al amór el remédio es tiérra en médio: The remedy for love is land between. That is, abſence is the beſt cure for love.

Prov. Lo perdído váya por amór de Dios: Let that which is loſt be given for the love of God. A reproof to thoſe who give nothing but what they can't tell what to do with, or what is of no uſe to them.

Prov. Quién câſa por amóres, málos días y buénas nóches: They that marry for love, have bad days and good nights. Becauſe very often when they marry for love there wants a fortune; or elſe they diſcover many faults, which before were hid, and this makes the days uneaſy, but the nights having the enjoyment that was deſir'd, forget the trouble of the day.

Prov. Vánſe los amóres, y quedán los dolóres: Love paſſes away, and the pain remains. That is, raſh love, after enjoyment, turns into trouble and ſorrow.

Prov. Quándo el cóxo de amór muére, que hára quién andár puéde? When the lame man dies for love, what will become of him that can go? That is, when vile people take upon them, what may not their betters do?

ANA'NAS, this fruit was firſt carried into India from Brazil, and has throve well. It is as big as a ſmall limon, very yellow and odoriferous, when ripe, very delicious to the taſte, and juicy. Only one grows upon a ſtalk, which is as tall as an artichoak, with many ſmall ones about it, which, when they gather the great one, they plant, and each of them produces a plant, growing up in a year. This fruit is hot and moiſt, and is eaten dipp'd in wine. There is another ſort which they call Ananas Bravo, or Wild Ananas, which grows as high as a horſe-man's ſpear, ſmooth, ſtrait, round, and as thick as an orange-tree, the leaves prickly, and a great knot of them at the foot of it. The roots of it are entangled under ground, and ſprout up again, one tree producing another, ſo that they make hedges. On the boughs grows a fruit they call the Wild Ananas, becauſe like the other. It is as big as a melon, of a pleaſant red, all divided like the cypreſs-apple, but at a diſtance like the pine-apple; it is not very pleaſant to the taſte, and therefore eaten by few. There comes a moiſture from the tree and roots, which is of good uſe in phyſick. Chriſt. Acoſt. nat. hiſt. E. Ind.

A'SIA, one of the four parts of the world, and the firſt in reſpect that man was there created and redeem'd. The five principal parts of it are, Tartary, China, India, Perſia, and the Turkiſh empire. On the Weſt it is divided from Europe by the rivers Obb, Rha, and Tanais, or Don, by the Black Sea and Mediterranean, then is join'd to Africk by a ſmall neck of land bordering on Egypt, and parted from the reſt of it by the Red Sea; on the ſouth it has the main-ocean, and in it a great number of noble iſlands; on the eaſt the great ocean ſtill, except towards the northern part, where it is not yet known how far it ſtretches out towards America, but on the north it has the Frozen Sea. The name of Aſia, the learned Bochart in his Geographia ſacra, ſays, is derived from the Phœnician word aſia, ſignifying the middle part, becauſe this name was at firſt properly to that we now call Aſia the Leſs, or Natolia, which juts out into the Mediterranean, and lies as it were in the middle of the ſea, and in the middle between Europe and Africa, and from that part the name in proceſs of time was communicated to all that vaſt continent.

A'ſno campés, or campeſíno, a wild aſs.

A'ſno ſardéſco, an aſs of the Sardinian breed, which are very ſerviceable.

Prov. El áſno a la vihuéla: The aſs to the lute. This they ſay when a man pretends to thoſe things he doe not underſtand; as an ignorant perſon pretending to talk learnedly, which is as if an aſs ſhould pretend to play upon a lute.

Prov. Dádle el áſno: Put on the aſs. We ſay, Drive on, car-man; which is to ſay, a man would rather be hang'd than marry an ugly woman. For in Spain criminals are carried to execution upon an aſs, inſtead of the cart uſed in England.

Prov. El áſno y la mugér a pálos ſe han de vencér: An aſs and a woman are to be conquer'd with a cudgel. The occaſion of this proverb, they ſay, was a carrier, who coming to a narrow paſſage, could not get his aſs to go on, and fell a beating of him unmercifully, till a traveller coming by, and reproving him for ſo doing, he bid him hold his peace, for an aſs and a woman were to be overcome with a cudgel. The traveller, who had an ill wife, went home and try'd the experiment upon her, which he found had good effect, and ſo the proverb held good.

Prov. No cómpres áſno de recuéro, ni te cáſes con hija de meſonéro: Do not buy an aſs of a carrier, nor marry an inn-keeper's daughter. The reaſon, becauſe if a carrier ſells his aſs, which he has ſo much uſe for himſelf, he muſt either be very bad, or old, or ſold dear; and for the inn-keeper's daughter, ſhe is expoſed to ſo much company, and ſo many temptations, that it is hard for her to come off untainted.

Prov. Quién al áſno alába, tal híjo le náſaa: He that praiſes the aſs, may he have ſuch a ſon born to him. That is, may he that is over-fond of mean things never know better, but may all he has be mean.

Prov. A'ſno coxo mas avías de madrugár: Lame aſs, you ought to get up earlier. This is apply'd to thoſe who are dull, ſlow, or unhandy, and therefore cannot compaſs their buſineſs in time: It adviſes them to riſe early, that they may have leiſure to perform their affairs, ſince nature has obſtructed their doing them as quick as others.

Prov. A'ſno con óro alcánçalo tódo: An aſs loaded with gold overtakes every thing. That is, tho' a man be never ſo much an aſs, if he has but money enough, he may do what he pleaſes.

Prov. A'ſno málo cábe cáſa aguija ſin pálo: An ill aſs puts on when he is near home without beating. This we ſee in all jades, which when they know they are drawing towards home, will go without whip or ſpur.

Prov. Aſno cóxo, y hómbre vòxo, y el demúño, tódo es úno: A lame aſs, and a red-hair'd man, and the devil, are all one. So ill a conceit they have of red hair; and as for a lame beaſt, every body knows it is plague enough.

Prov. Aſno de múchos lóbos les cómen: The wolves devour the aſs that belongs to many owners. Becauſe if he has many owners none of them look to him. Therefore we ſay, what is every body's buſineſs, is no body's buſineſs.

Prov. Burláos con el áſno dáros ha en la cára con el rábo: Jeſt with an aſs, and he'll flap you in the face with his tail. If you make your ſelf familiar, or jeſt with mean people, you muſt expect no better than a ſlap in the face with their tail; that is, ſome brutiſh words or actions.

Prov. Caýdo ha el áſno en el alcacél: The aſs is fallen among the green barley. This is to expreſs a miſchance attended with ſome good circumſtance, which alleviates, or quite blots it out; as is ſignify'd by the aſs falling among green barley, where tho' he had the ill luck to fall, yet he may fill his belly to enable him to go on.

Prov. Deſqué no púdo al áſno, tórnaſe al albárda: Since he could not be reveng'd upon the aſs, he falls upon the packſaddle. This ſhows the humour of many men, who when offended, and dare not ſhow their reſentment on them that caus'd it, vent their paſſion on their wives, children, ſervants, or others they have power over.

Prov. Habló el áſno, y díxo, ho, ho: The aſs ſpoke, and ſaid, ho, ho. For thoſe who after a long ſilence, as if they had been ſtudying ſentences, break with ſomething which is not at all to the purpoſe.

Prov. Mas vále áſno que me lléve, que cavállo que ne derruéque: I had rather have an aſs that will carry me, than a horſe that will throw me. That is, I had rather be contented with a moderate conveniency, or with indifferent things which I can compaſs and manage, than with greatneſs that may coſt me a fall.

Prov. Mas vále con mal áſno contendér, que la léña acuéſtas traér: It is better to ſtrive with an ill aſs, than to carry the wood upon one's back. A bad ſervant is better than to do one's own work.

Prov. Al áſno muérto la ceváda al rábo: When the aſs is dead, the barley at his tail. A reproof to them that are ſlow in doing good, even when it is too late, or even then miſplace it; as it is after a poor beaſt is ſtarv'd to lay the provender to its tail.

Prov. Al áſno y al múlo, la cárga al cúlo: The aſs and the mule muſt have the burthen upon the rump. That is, they muſt have it laid on behind; but in another ſenſe, that brutiſh men muſt be cudgell'd, as mules and aſſes are, behind; for that is alſo a load, according to the Spaniſh phraſe, U'na cárga de pálos; that is, a good beating.

Prov. Súfre el áſno la cárga, mas no la ſobrecárga: The aſs bears the burthen, but not an over-burthen. That is, we muſt not lay too much upon a man, tho' he be never ſo patient; for is you over-burthen him, like the aſs, he'll throw all down.

Prov. Un áſno éntre múchas mónas cócanle tódas: When one aſs is among many monkeys, they all make faces at him. When a cully falls into the hands of many ſharpers, they all fleece him. Or when many women make a fool of a man.

Prov. A un áſno báſtale úna albárda: One pannel is enough for one aſs. One employment is enough for one man.

Prov. A áſno modórro arriéro lóco: A mad carrier for a jadiſh aſs. Becauſe a mad fellow will always be thraſhing, talking, and putting him on.

Prov. E'ſſo le eſtá cómo al áſno los coráles: That becomes him as a coral does an aſs. We ſay, ſuch a one looks like a ſow ſaddled.

Prov. No vée ſiéte ſóbre un áſno: He ſees not ſeven as he ſits upon an aſs. A man had ſeven aſſes, drove ſix of them, and rode upon the other; as he was going, he ſeveral times counted them, and ſtill found but ſix, forgetting that he had one under him, till enquiring of thoſe he met for the ſeventh, one ſhow'd him that he was upon, and then he found out his miſtake. Thence when a man does not ſee or conceive the moſt obvious things, they ſay, he cannot ſee ſeven when he ſits upon an aſs. It is not unlike, he cannot ſee wood for trees.

Prov. Si úno, dos, y tres te dízen que éres áſno, pónte un rábo: If one, two, and three tell you you are an aſs, put on a tail. That is, whatever is generally ſaid of you, you muſt of neceſſity acquieſce, for either it is true, or it will be impoſſible for you to undeceive the world.

Prov. A'ſno cargádo de óro ſúbe ligéro por úna montáña: An aſs loaded with gold climbs a mountain nimbly. This, tho' not verified in the literal ſenſe, is to expreſs how readily men undertake any thing, and with what alacrity they perform it for the lucre of gold.

Prov. Caér de ſu áſno: To fall from his aſs. When a man is obſtinate, and will take no advice, and diſcovers his errors too late, they ſay, he falls from his aſs; that is, he was before like an aſs mounted on his own folly, and is then fallen down, being made ſenſible of his ignorance.

Prov. O moríra el áſno, o quién le aguíja: Either the aſs will die, or his driver. When the death of one, of two, or more, will deliver a man out of trouble. Taken from a man that undertook for a maintenance and good reward to make his aſs ſpeak in a certain term of years; and a friend asking him how he came to undertake ſuch an impoſſibility, upon forfeiture of life if he fail'd; he anſwer'd, either the lord will die, meaning him that kept them, or the aſs, or the driver, before that time.

BALSAMÍNA, the herb baulm.

BA'LSAMO, balſam of the Indies; it is famous for its delicate ſcent, and more for its wonderful effects in healing of wounds, and ſeveral cures of diſtempers. The tree this balſam comes from is as big as the pomegranate-tree, or ſomewhat bigger, and ſomething like it. There is of it white, red, green, and black. It comes from the tree cutting a gaſh in it, whence it flows in abundance. Some is pure, which they call Opobalſamum, and diſtills from the tree; the other, which is not ſo good, is extracted from the wood, bark, and leaves boil'd and preſs'd, and this they call Xilobalſamum; beſides ſome adulterate it, mixing other liquors with it. The plenty only makes it leſs valued, for it is no way inferior to the celebrated balſam of the holy land. It is produced in New Spain, and the provinces of Guatimala and Chiapa; but the beſt is that of the iſland of Tolu, not far from Carthagena. This is generally white, and the white is better than the red, this better than the green, and the black the worſt. F. Joſ. Acoſt. nat. hiſt. W. Ind. lib. 4. cap. 28. p. 263. Thoſe that deſire it may ſee much more in Monardes, fol. 9 and 84.

Bálſamo. To the account above out of Acoſta concerning that balſam of the Weſt Indies, it is not amiſs to add a word out of Ray concerning that of the Eaſt. He ſays, it is a ſmall ſhrubby tree growing as high as privet, bearing very few leaves, like rue. The precious balſam flows from its branches, an inciſion being made into them. This was the balſam and its trees growing in former ages in Paleſtine and other eaſtern countries. At preſent there are great trees of natural balſam in ſeveral parts of America, but particularly in the province of Chile. Pag. 1755, verb. balſamum.

Betele', it is a tender plant that runs up a ſtick, and the leaf is the delight of the Aſiaticks: for men, and women, from the prince to the peaſant, have no greater pleaſure than to chew it all day in company, and no viſit begins or ends without this herb. Before it they always chew the areca, deſcrib'd in its place, that the coolneſs of this, as they ſay, may temper the heat of the other; and they lay a little diſſolv'd lime on the betele leaf to colour and ſoften its biting taſte. It ſpends not ſo well in any part of Aſia as in the Philippine iſlands, where the areca is ſoft and eaſy to chew. The Spaniards make a compoſition of both herbs with lime, which they call buyo, and carry it in curious little boxes, to chew it every moment abroad and at home. The betele makes the lips ſo fine, red and beautiful, that if the European ladies could, they would purchaſe it for the weight in gold. Gemelli, vol. 3. lib. 1. cap. 8.

Bezaa'r, o piédra bezaár, the bezoar-ſtone. In the Weſt-Indies theſe are found in the maw or belly of the Indian ſheep, (of which you may ſee more verb llamas.) Sometimes they find in a ſheep but one, ſometimes two, three or four; ſome leſs than ſmall nuts, others as big as pidgeons eggs, and the author has ſeen one as big as an orange. In ſhape ſome are round, ſome oval, others irregular. As to colour, there are black, white, grey, greeniſh and gold colour. They are made as it were of ſeveral layers or cruſts one upon another. Several creatures are ſaid to produce them beſides the llamas, as the vicuñas, tarugas and cypris. The vicuñas commonly yield the largeſt, and the tarugas the beſt. The ſtone is of excellent uſe in phyſick. The beſt bezoar ſtones are thoſe brought from the Eaſt-Indies, the next to them thoſe of Peru, and the laſt in order thoſe of New Spain. It has often been found that theſe ſtones grow in the beaſts maw or belly, upon ſome bit of iron or ſtick that the creature has ſwallow'd, theſe things being found in the middle of them, which makes ſome people believe they are counterfeits, but it is moſt certain they are not. F. Joſ. Acoſt, Nat. Hiſt. W. Ind. lib. 4. chap. 42. pag. 296. Chriſt. Acoſta, Nat. Hiſt. of E. Ind. ſays, the bezoar is found there in a creature ſomewhat reſembling a goat and a deer, very ſwift, which the Perſians call pazan. The Perſians, Arabs and Corazans call this ſtone pazar, from the beaſt. To know the true bezoar from the counterfeit, they take a little duſt of lime, and wetting any part of the ſtone with the tip of the tongue rub it upon that duſt, which, if true, it dies of a fine green; if falſe, it either alters not the colour at all, or very little. It is good againſt all poiſons, infections, melancholy, and inveterate diſtempers; to cheriſh the ſpirits, to drive any thing from the heart, to create an appetite, and many more diſeaſes. Chriſt. Acoſt. Nat. Hiſt. Eaſt. Ind.

Bisca'ya, the province of Biſcay in the north of Spain, which gives name to the well known bay of Biſcay. It is properly a ſmall province bounded by Aſturias, Old Caſtile, Guipuſcoa, and Alava; but moſt people under this acceptation include both the provinces laſt named, by which means they extend it much farther. Formerly it had particular lords to whom it was ſubject, who were of the noble family of Haro. Henry the ſecond king Spain, created his brother D. Tello de Caſtilla, who was, as well as himſelf, a baſtard, earl of Biſcay; but this title died with him, and the country was annex'd to the crown, the kings of Spain to this day ſtyling themſelves lords of Biſcay.

Bisca'yno, a Biſcayner.

Prov. Biſcáyno nécio taraçón de en médio: The ſilly Biſcayner is for the middle piece. The Caſtilians make a jeſt of the Biſcayners, as we do of ſome other people, and with as little reaſon, for they are an ingenious people, only they do not ſpeak the Spaniſh properly. The occaſion of this proverb was, that two Caſtilians being at dinner with a Biſcayner, they thought to put a jeſt upon him, and cheat him of the middle piece of the fiſh; therefore the one ſaid he did not love the head, the other ſaid he could not eat the tail: The Biſcayner cut the fiſh in three pieces, and gave the tail to him that ſaid he could not eat the head, and the head to the other that did not love the tail, ſaying as above, the ſilly Biſcayner is for the middle piece, and ſo retorted the jeſt upon thoſe that thought to play upon him.

Bóda, a wedding. The etymology not known.

Bódas, the ſame as bóda, being indifferently uſed either in the ſingular or plural number.

Andárſe de bóda en bóda, to go from wedding to wedding. That is, to live an idle ſpunging life, always running from one good houſe to another, or from feaſt to feaſt, without taking any pains, or minding any thing but mirth.

Prov. Aún ſe cóme el pan de la bóda: The wedding bread is ſtill eaten. That is, the wedding feaſting is ſcarce over. It is all love and mirth. It is honeymoon ſtill.

Prov. A la bóda de Don García lléva pan en la capílla: Carry bread in your hood to Don Garcia's wedding. That is, do not confide too much in the cheer you ſhall have at a feaſt or wedding, but provide for your ſelf, leſt it fall ſhort, as they ſay it happened at D. Garcia's wedding, who was a poor gentleman, and had invited many gueſts, the better ſort had the dinner ſet before them, and the others were forced to take up with a ſecond table, where bread being ſcarce, one wiſer than the reſt pull'd out a piece he had brought from home and ſaid as above: And he ſays in the hood, becauſe in former ages the men wore great hoods hanging behind to pull over their heads upon occaſion, before hats were in uſe, and made uſe of them as a pocket.

Prov. Bóda buéna bóda múla, el mártes en tu cáſa: Whether the wedding be a good one or a bad one, be at home, or you muſt be at home on Tueſday. It was once uſual in Spain, eſpecially among the ordinary ſort, to be married upon Saturday, and then they treated their gueſts that day, Sunday, and Monday. So the proverb ſays, you muſt be at home on Tueſday, becauſe be the wedding never ſo ſplendid, the feaſting is then done; or elſe becauſe it is time to retire, to look to your buſineſs.

Prov. Bóda de négros: A wedding of blacks. That is, all noiſe and confuſion. Becauſe thoſe poor people at their weddings have not the order and decency that is obſerved among gentry; but all talk, ſing, and dance without any method.

Prov. De bóbos y bóbas ſe hínchen las bódas: Weddings are fill'd up with men and women fools. It is a ſufficient ſign of folly to be always haunting weddings and ſuch publick meetings, to which fools reſort either to eat and drink, or to ſhew their fine cloaths, or becauſe they know not how to ſpend their time better.

Prov. Dé tále bódas táles tórtas: Of ſuch weddings ſuch cakes. That is, from ſuch company you muſt expect ſuch actions; or, ſuch a courſe of life muſt come to ſuch an end; or, ſuch cauſes will produce ſuch effects. You can expect no more from a cat but her skin. They ſay, the occaſion of the proverb was a gentleman's marrying a lady that was not ſo chaſte as Lucretia, and at his wedding ſome wag brought in cakes ſtuck with Cornupia's, and ſome asking what that meant, another anſwer'd, ſuch a wedding, ſuch cakes; alluding to the horns that threatned the gentleman.

Prov. 'Eſſe es de bóda, que duérme con la nóbia: He has moſt ſhare in the wedding who lies with the bride. That is, he is the principal gueſt, he has moſt intereſt in the wedding, for he has all the enjoyment of the feaſt and bride at another's expence.

Prov. La bóda de los póbres tóda es vózes: Poor peoples weddings are all noiſe. Becauſe as was ſaid above in the blacks wedding, the poor have not that order and decency as the rich, and all their pleaſure is noiſe and confuſion.

Prov. La mas hermóſa de tódas cómo la ótra háze bódas: The beautifulleſt of them all makes a wedding like another. This is a check to the pride of thoſe women who are conceited of their beauty, to give them to underſtand, that the beſt they can expect is but to be marry'd, and uſed as other women are, to breed children, bring them forth with pain, and perhaps be no more valued.

Prov. La que no báyla de la bóda ſe ſálga: Let her that does not dance turn out of the wedding. When you are at Rome you muſt do as they do at Rome. In company no one muſt be ſingular, but do as the company does, or elſe leave it, leſt they be look'd upon as ſpies on the actions of others.

Prov. Lo que no ſe háze a la bóda, no ſe háze a tóda hóra: What is not done at the wedding, is not done at any indifferent time. That is, if people do not perform at the proper ſeaſons, as making a feaſt at the wedding, or the like, it is in vain to expect it of them at another time. Applicable to thoſe that refuſe to do things in ſeaſon, and ſeek delays, promiſing from day to day what ought to be perform'd out of hand.

Prov. Ni bóda ſin cánto, ni mortuório ſin llánto: There is no wedding without ſinging, nor no burial without weeping. This is natural, ſince every body endeavours to rejoice at weddings, and at funerals many weep, tho' it be but for faſhion.

Prov. No áy bóda ſin tornabóda: There is no wedding without a ſecond wedding feaſt. It is the Spaniſh cuſtom, after the bridegroom has celebrated the feſtival of his nuptials as long as he thinks fit, for the wife's father to treat all the company ſplendidly; and this they call tornabóda, that is, the repetition of the wedding. Or if this fails, the bridegroom performs it himſelf, which is the reaſon they ſay, There is no wedding without the repetition of the wedding, becauſe it is look'd upon as an indiſpenſable duty.

Prov. No ſe háze la bóda de hóngos, ſinó es de buénos ducádos redóndos: The wedding is not made of muſhrooms, but of good round ducats. That is, it is not a ſlight matter like muſhrooms, that will defray the expence of a wedding, but it requires good round ducats, a round expence, and not by halves. Applicable to any that think to do great matters with a ſmall charge.

Prov. La fláca báyla en la bóda, que no la górda: The lean one dances at the wedding, and not the fat one. This proverb is by way of advice to unweildy women, that they do not covet to go to places where there muſt be dancing, becauſe they will be ſhamed by young tender girls, who are fit for that ſport. In general it directs all perſons to apply themſelves to that they are fit for, and not to aim at what they can never perform.

Prov. Qual bóda ſin Dóña Tóda? What wedding is there without Dóña Tóda? This is a reproof to all thoſe that thruſt themſelves into every company, and take care to miſs no merry bout, as they ſay this Doña Tóda did, from whom the proverb took its riſe.

Prov. Quién ſe enſáña en la bóda, piérdela tóda: He that takes pet at a wedding loſes it all. If a man grows paſſionate and pettiſh, he either goes away, and ſo has no ſhare of the merry-making, or, if he ſtays, is ſo diſcompoſed, that it little affects him. To inſtruct us not to be eaſily provoked, or grow angry in company that is met to be jovial and merry.

Prov. Quién bién báyla, de bóda en bóda ſe ánda: He that is a good dancer goes from one wedding to another. Whoever has any particular grace, as dancing, ſinging, good converſation, or the like, is always acceptable in ſuch merry meetings, and therefore is commonly invited, or, if not, eaſily intrudes.

Prov. Si déſta eſcápo. y no muéro, núnca mas bódas al ciélo: If I eſcape this, and do not die, I'll never go ſee more weddings in heaven. This is a fable, that the fox ſeeing the eagle very weary, asked where ſhe had been, who anſwer'd that at a wedding in heaven. The fox deſir'd her the next wedding there was in heaven to carry her thither, which was what the eagle deſired, and accordingly came and took up the fox, whom from a great height ſhe let fall. The fox, as ſhe was tumbling, cry'd out, If I eſcape this bout, and am not kill'd, I'll ne'er go to more weddings in heaven. Applied to thoſe who having run themſelves into ſome great danger, take warning by it, and promiſe if they eſcape, never to run ſuch hazards again.

Prov. A la bóda del herréro cáda qual con ſu dinéro: Every one goes with his own money to the blackſmith's wedding. This is in country towns, where there is but one ſmith, and therefore all the people court him, ſo they go to his wedding, and every one carries ſomething to preſent him. Every one is free to preſent where there is a proſpect of intereſt.

Prov. Quándo fuéres a la bóda pon tu ólla: When you go to a wedding hang on your own pot. That is, provide meat at home, tho' you go to a feaſt, for fear of what may happen. See more of this above, under the proverb A la bóda de Don Garcia, &c.

Prov. En la bóda quién ménos cóme es la nóvia: At the wedding it is the bride that eats leaſt. Becauſe when all others are merry and free, modeſty reſtrains her.

CANE'LA, cinnamon. This excellent bark, now ſo well known, is taken off a tree about as big as an orange-tree, with a leaf like that of the laurel, and a ſmall fruit about as big as a wild olive. There are abundance of theſe trees on the coaſt of Malabar, but the beſt cinnamon is that of the iſland of Ceylon. The tree has two barks, and the cinnamon is the ſecond, which being taken off and laid on the ground, turns round with the heat of the ſun, and grows red, whereas at firſt it is of an aſh-colour. Every three years there comes a new bark upon the trees. The Arabs call cinnamon ſalihacha, ſelicha, querfaa, and querfeen; the Chineſes, darchini; the people of Ceylon, whence the beſt comes, cuardo; thoſe of Malaca, caiſman; the Malabars, camiaop. Prov. Quándo en cáſa no eſtá el gáto, eſtiéndeſe el ráto: When the cat is not at home, the mouſe grows proud. We ſay, when the cat is away, the mice will play.

Prov. Cáda úno en ſu cáſa, y diós en la de tódos: Every one in his houſe, and God in all of them. We ſay, Every one for himſelf, and God for us all.

Prov. En tu cáſa cuézen hábas y en la mía calderádas: In your houſe they boil beans, and in mine kettles full. There is ſomething to do in your houſe, but much more in mine. It is generally taken in an ill ſenſe, as when there is much quarrelling in a houſe, or the like.

Prov. En cáſa del ahorcádo no ſe ha de nombrár la ſogá: The halter is not to be nam'd in a houſe that a man has been hang'd out of. That is, we muſt be ſo far from reproaching any body with their misfortunes, that we muſt not name thoſe things which may put them in mind of them.

Prov. En cáſa del tamboriléro tódos ſon dançarines: In the taborer's houſe they are all dancers. That is, the whole family is ſomething like the head, for as the maſter tabors ſo they dance.

Prov. Pués que ſe quéma la cáſa calentémonos tódos: Since the houſe is a fire let us all warm our ſelves. That is, let us make the beſt of all misfortunes.

Prov. A ýd-os de mi cáſa, y que queréis con mi mugér, no áy que reſponder: There is no anſwer to get you out of my houſe, and what have you to do with my wife? There is no doubt but every one ought to be maſter of his own houſe, and of his wife, and therefore when he bids any man go out of his houſe, or not to have to do with his wife, the beſt way is to make no anſwer.

Prov. En cáſa del herréro peór apéro. The worſt tools are in the ſmith's houſe: Or, En cáſa del herréro cuchíllo mangorréro: In the ſmith's houſe a bad knife. Or as we expreſs, none worſe ſhod than the ſhoe-maker's wife.

Prov. No me búſque en mi cáſa, quién me puéde hallár en la pláça: Let him not look for me at home, who can meet me in the market-place. Men who have much buſineſs abroad, do not love to be diſturb'd at home, whither they go to take their reſt, having offices or other proper places abroad for buſineſs.

Prov. En cáſa del póbre tódos rínen, y tódos tiénen razón: In the poor man's houſe all quarrel, and all are in the right. Becauſe there are many wants, which put them out of humour, and that with good reaſon.

Prov. Caſa con dos puértas, quándo mas cerrádas, ténlas por abiértas: When a houſe has two doors, tho' they are never ſo faſt lock'd, you may make account they are wide open. That is, you can never be ſecure where there is a back-door, for whilſt you watch one, you may be betray'd at the other. See two more proverbs to this effect above.

Prov. Antes de caſár, ten cáſas en que morár, y tiérras en que labrár, y viñas que podár. Before you marry get a houſe to live in, lands to till, and a vineyard to prune. That is, do not marry till you have wherewith to maintain your family.

Prov. Cáſa de pádre, viñá de aguélo, olivár de reviſagué.o: A father's houſe, a grand-father's vineyard, and a great grandfather's olive-garden. That is, theſe are beſt, viz. a houſe built by one's father, which is ſeaſon'd and not decay'd, a vineyard by one's grandfather, becauſe it is beſt of ſome ſtanding, and the olive-garden requires much time to grow up to perfection.

Prov. Con mal ánda la cáſa, dónde la ruéca mánda al eſpáda: That houſe is in bad plight, where the diſtaff commands the ſword. Where the woman wears the breeches.

Casa'ca, a coat or upper garment.

Casa'da, a marry'd woman, a wife.

Casade'ro, marriageable, of age to marry.

Casa'do, marry'd; alſo a marry'd man, a husband.

Prov. A la mal caſáda mirádle a la cára. Look upon the face of a wife that has an ill husband. This is in general; look upon a woman, and by her face you may diſcover whether ſhe has a good husband.

Prov. Quién áma la caſáda la vída tráe empreſtáda: He who loves a marry'd woman has his life but upon courteſy. That is, till the husband diſcovers the intreague and kills him.

Prov. Bién, o mal caſádo me hán: Well or ill, I am marry'd. That is, when a thing is paſt there is no looking back.

Casama'ta, a cazematte, which is a platform in that part of the flank of the baſtion next the curtin, ſomewhat retir'd and drawn back towards the capital of the baſtion, on which guns are planted, loaded with ſmall ſhot to ſcoure along the ditch, and cover'd from the enemies works with earth-works, call'd orillon's, or epaulments.

Casamente'ro, a match-maker.

Casamie'nto, a wedding.

Prov. No áy caſamiénto póbre, ni mortuório ríco: There is no poor wedding, nor rich burial. That is, always new marry'd people are ſaid to have great portions and eſtates, and widows alſo pretend they are left poor.

Prov. Caſamiénto, y húdas málas préſto ſon llegadas: Marriage and ill luck are not long a coming. Said by thoſe that love a looſe life.

Prov. Caſamiénto hágas que a pléyto andes: May you marry ſo that you may have law-ſuits. That is, rather a curſe than proverb, as wiſhing a man may be at variance with his wife's kindred, who ought to be his friends.

Prov. Déſtos caſamiéntos que maripárda háze a únos péſa, y a ótros pláze: Some are pleas'd and ſome diſpleas'd at theſe matches Mariparda makes. That is, whoever meddles in ſuch affairs can never pleaſe all people.

Casamú'ro, a ſingle wall without any other works.

Casañe'ro, one of the houſe.

Casa'r, to marry, to wed. Hebrew caſár, to bind.

Prov. Antes que te cáſes, míra lo que házes, que no es núdo que aſsi deſátes: Before you marry take heed what you do, for it is no knot that can be eaſily unty'd. That is very plain advice to be cautious in the affair of matrimony, becauſe it is indiſſoluble. It may be apply'd in other caſes, as we ſay, look before you leap.

Prov. Caſár, caſár, y quién ha de governár: Marry, marry, and who muſt rule the houſe. A reproof to young people that would marry before they have ſenſe to govern a family. It is ſaid upon any occaſion, when people would undertake what they are not capable of.

Prov. Caſár, y compadrár, cáda qual con ſu ygual: Let every one marry and make a goſſip of his equal. A general advice to endeavour in all things to have to do with our equals, eſpecially in matrimony, becauſe inequality of birth or fortune is often the cauſe of diſcord.

Prov. Cáſate verás, perderás ſueño, núnca dormirás: Marry and you'll ſee what will come of it, you'll loſe your ſleep, and never cloſe your eyes. A proverb to expreſs the care that matrimony brings upon a man.

Prov. Caſarás, y amanſarás: You'll marry and grow tame. It is a common ſaying in Engliſh, if you will tame any one marry him.

Prov. Caſár ruýnes, y nacerán montarácés: Marry a baſe couple you'll have a wild breed. It is a general opinion that the children take after the parents, and ſometimes it may be, but daily experience ſhows the contrary. In beaſts indeed the main thing is the breed, but in man I think education is the principal.

Prov. De cédo caſár, y cédo madrugár, arrepentírte has, mas no múcho mal: You'll repent marrying early, and riſing very early, but there is no great great harm in either.

Prov. Para mal caſár, mas válе múnca maridár: Better never be a husband, or have a husband, than ill marry'd.

Prov. Quién léxos ſe va a caſár, o va engañádo, o va a engañár: He that goes a great way to marry is either cheated or goes to cheat. We find this too often verify'd, for things at a great diſtance are ſeldom truly repreſented.

Prov. Quién tárde cáſa, mal cáſa: He that marries late, marries ill. Becauſe they ought to marry young to have children, and to be us'd to one another's temper, for old people when they firſt come together cannot bear with one another's failings; and the ſcripture ſays, Bonum eſt viro cum portaverit jugum ab adoleſcentia ſua.

Prov. Quién mal cáſa, tárde embiúda: It is long before he becomes a widower, who marries ill. That is, when people are ill marry'd they always think it long before the widowhood comes.

Prov. Si quiéres bién caſár, cáſa con tu yguál: If you would be well marry'd, marry your equal. This we have above under the words, caſár y compadrár, cáda qual con ſu yguál.

Prov. Caſár, caſár ſuéna bién, y ſábe mal: Marry, marry, ſounds well, and reliſhes but ill. That is, people talk of marrying with a great deal of pleaſure, but afterwards meet with cares and troubles that give it an ill reliſh.

Prov. La que con múchos ſe cáſa, a tódos enfáda: She that is marry'd to many tires them all. In the literal ſenſe, a woman that marries many husbands, is ſuppos'd to weary them out of their lives with her ill temper. But otherwiſe by caſár con múchos, to marry many, is only meant an impertinent woman, that has an oar in every man's boat, and has buſineſs with every body, which vexes and tries all the world.

Cóca, is a ſmall green leaf growing on little trees or buſhes about a man's height, in exceſſive hot and very moiſt land. The tree bears this leaf every four months. It requires much care in cultivating, and much more to preſerve it when gather'd. They lay it very orderly into long narrow baskets, which they load on the ſheep of the country, and they travel with this commodity in flocks carrying two or three thouſand baskets. It generally grows in the country they call Los Andes, in bottoms which are intollerable hot, where it rains moſt part of the year; and it coſts the Indians intolerable labour and many lives to look after it, becauſe they go for it from the cold mountains. The uſe of it is only to chew and ſuck the juice of it, but not ſwallow the leaf. It doubtleſs is nouriſhing, for the Indians will travel great journeys, or do any other great labour without eating, with only an handful of coca. It has an unpleaſant taſte, and they powder it with aſhes or lime. F. Joſ. Acoſt. Nat. Hiſt. W. Ind. lib. 4. chap. 22. p. 252.

çóco, a market-place.

Cóco, a worm that eats the vines, or other trees; or any ſuch ſort of worm or inſect. Alſo the word us'd to fright children, as we ſay the bul-beggar.

Cóco, o pálma de las Índias, the coco-tree, otherwiſe call'd the Indian palm-tree, becauſe like the palm, being tall, hard, and putting out greater branches the higher they riſe. The fruit call'd alſo cocos, or coco-nuts by us, have a ſhell whereof they make drinking cups. The kernel taſtes ſomewhat like a new almond, but when hanging on the tree all within is water, which they drink as a great dainty, and to cool them in hot weather. They ſay the tree puts out a new cluſter of coco-nuts every month, ſo that it produces twelve times in a year. They are commonly as big as a ſmall musk-melon. There is another ſort they call coquillos, or little coco-nuts, which is a better ſort of fruit, and grows in the kingdom of Chile; they are ſomewhat leſs than wallnuts, but rounder. There is yet another ſort, which does not give one ſingle kernel, but a great many little ones like almonds, which are in it like the ſeeds in a pomgranate. Theſe almonds are three times as big as thoſe of Caſtile, and taſte like them, but are a little harder; they are alſo juicy and oily. They are pleaſant to eat, and for want of the others ſerve to make marchpanes, and ſuch like dainties. They call them almonds of the Andes, becauſe abundance of them grow in the Andes of Peru, and they are ſo hard, that they require a great ſtroke with a ſtone to break them. F. Joſ. Acoſt. Nat. Hiſt W. Ind. lib. 4. chap. 26. p. 259. In the Maldivy iſlands they build, rig, and fit out ſhips from this tree alone, which furniſhes all the timber, maſts, yards, ſails, and rigging; and when fit to ſail, they load her with commodities from the ſame tree, as oil, wine, vinegar, black ſugar, fruit, and ſtrong water. With this tree alone they build good houſes, and cover them with the leaves. The body of the tree affords timber for building, of the leaves they make ſails, of the outward ſhell of the nut all the cordage and rigging. The wine is made by cutting a branch of the tree, and putting a veſſel under, into which that liquor diſtils, and is call'd Sura. This ſeveral times diſtill'd becomes a ſtrong water, whereof there are two ſorts, the beſt call'd ſula, and the ſecond ſort arach, or, as we call it, rack. The ſame ſura ſet in the ſun becomes vinegar. After the firſt running of the ſura from the tree, they receive the laſt running in another veſſel, which boil'd, becomes ſugar, call'd there jagra. The inward hard ſhell ſerves to make cups and diſhes, and is alſo us'd for firing by curious goldſmiths in thoſe parts. Of the nut enough has been ſaid, but in the Eaſt Indies they dry it, and ſo keep it all the year, carrying it to ſeveral parts. Of this dry'd kernel they alſo make very good oil, and another ſort of it green. Acoſta Nat. Hiſt. of the Eaſt Indies.

çoçóbra, trouble, affliction, croſſneſs of fortune: But moſt properly, and from thence apply'd to ſignify as above, it is the wind, when it blows right a-head, which makes the men that row in a galley labour hard, and ſhe beats as if ſhe went upon ſtones. It is alſo a dangerous caſt at dice, which puts him that throws it into a fear, as when ſeven is the main, and he caſts four for his chance.

A common ſaying, when a man will not take notice of his own ſhame, or endeavours to turn off affronts ſlightly, as here, the wife calls her husband cuckold, and he, as if ſhe did not know it, asks who told her ſo.

Prov. Cornúdo y apaleádo, mandádle baylár: When a man is cuckolded and beaten, bid him dance. This they ſay, when a man is much wrong'd, and yet they make him pay coſts, or when after abuſing a man they would have him be merry. The ſtory is of one who catching his wife with a great man, was beaten by him, and then they made friends, and the company danc'd, bidding the husband dance with them, who anſwers with this proverb. As if it were not enough that a man ſhould be cuckolded and beaten, but he muſt dance too.

Prov. Mas válе ſer cornúdo, que no lo ſépa ningúno; que ſin ſérlo, penſarlo tódo el múndo: It is better to be a cuckold, ſo no body knows it, than not to be ſo, and have all the world believe it. Becauſe the ſhame is in the opinion of the world; for whatever diſgrace is not known, never puts a man out of countenance.

Prov. Múcho ſabía el cornúdo, péro mas quién ſe los puſo: The cuckold was very cunning, but he was cunninger that cukolded him. This is applicable to any man that has a great conceit of himſelf, but is outwitted or over-reach'd by another. For he that cuckolds another muſt uſe art to deceive him.

Prov. Por éſſo es úno cornúdo, porqué puéden mas dos que úno: Therefore a man is a cuckold, becauſe two are too hard for one. The wife and the gallant contrive to abuſe the husband, and being two they have the advantage of him. This is applied in all other caſes, where, as we ſay, two to one is odds; or, two heads are better than one.

Prov. Quién es cornúdo y lo conſiénte, que ſéa cornúdo pára ſiémpre; He that is a cuckold and allows of it, may he be a cuckold for ever. If a man knows his ſhame, and does not reſent or endeavour to amend it, no body ought to pity him, but to wiſh it may attend him for ever.

Prov. Quién es cornúdo, y cálla, en el coráçon trae un aſcua: He who is a cuckold and ſays nothing, carries a burning coal in his heart. When a man ſtifles his reſentment and endeavours to conceal his diſgrace, it corrodes his heart and conſumes him, like a burning coal upon his heart.

Prov. Tras cornúdo ſañúdo: Angry or moroſe after being made a cuckold. That is, when a man after being cuckolded ſhows himſelf dogged and ſurly, yet has not the courage to puniſh the offenders, but only ſhows his reſentment in his looks.

Prov. El mal del cornúdo, el no lo ſábe, y ſabelo todo el múndo: All the world knows the cuckold's misfortune, but he knows it not himſelf. This is a common ſaying, when men are kept ignorant of their own misfortunes, which are publickly known abroad, as is uſual in this particular caſe, for very often a man knows nothing of his being a cuckold, tho' it be whiſper'd about all the country, becauſe no body cares to tell him. This ſame is ſaid ſhorter, thus,

Prov. El poſtrero que lo ſábe es el cornúdo: The cuckold is the laſt that knows it, as above.

DIO

Dió, vid. Dár, he gave.

Diocesáno, a dioceſan, the biſhop of the dioceſe.

Diocésis, a dioceſs. Greek.

Dionisio, Dennis, the proper name of a man. The firſt we find of this name was Bacchus, call'd by the Greeks Dionyſios, to turn round, becauſe wine makes the head turn round.

Dioptrica, dioptricks, a ſcience that treats of refracted rays, and their unions with one another, as they are received by glaſſes of ſeveral figures.

Dióſ, God. Lat. deus.

Diós y ayúda, God and good friends. Worldly means forward the work of God.

No hízo diós a quién deſamparár, God made no body to forſake him. He provides for all the creatures he makes.

Qual diós te trúxo por acá? What good luck brought you hither? When we are ſurprized to ſee one where we did not expect.

A diós, que me múdo; Farewell, for I remove my quarters. When a man has been civilly entertain'd in a houſe, he muſt not go away without taking leave.

Quedár a pedír por diós, to be reduced to beggary.

De diós en ayúſo, under God.

De diós lo áya, God reward you, ſays he who is not able to make a return himſelf.

Prov. Diós da el frío, conforme a la rópa: God gives the cold according to the cloaths. That is, God gives every man what he is able to bear. The poor, that are ill clad, are not ſo ſenſible of the cold, as the rich who have all conveniencies.

Prov. Diós me de maríde, rico, ſiquiéra ſéa berríco: God give me a rich husband, tho' he be an aſs. This is a woman's wiſh, who cares not what her husband is, provided he have but wealth to keep her well.

Prov. Diós de te ovéjas, y hijos pára con éllas: God give you ſheep, and ſons with them. A friendly prayer to wiſh a man cattle, and that his own children may look to it, that ſhepherds may not cheat him. The ſame may be underſtood of any other worldly goods.

Prov. Diós te de pádre y mádre en villa, y en tus tróxes trígo y harína: God give you a father and mother in a town, and corn and meal in your granaries. By a father and mother in town is meant, that they may live in a rich place, where they may be likely to thrive, and provide for the ſon; but in caſe they ſhould not, he wiſhes granaries full of corn, that the ſon may not ſtand in need of them.

Prov. Diós te ſálve, Méndo. No a mi, que eſtóy comiéndo: God ſave you, Mendo. Not me, for I am at dinner. An atheiſtical proverb, ſuppoſed to come from the mouth of a brutal man, who, having got what he wants, forgets God; and therefore when they ſay to him God ſave you, which he looks upon as too familiar an expreſſion, he anſwers, Not me, for I am at dinner; reckoning himſelf above that familiar ſalutation, tho' attended by ſo good a prayer.

Prov. Diós te guárde de piédra, y dárdo, y de hómbre denodádo: God preſerve you from a ſtone and dart, and from a furious man. This is a general prayer to deliver us from all dangers, and eſpecially ſuch as are unforeſeen, as a ſtone or dart, which reach at a diſtance, and a furious man, who does any miſchief before he gives warning.

Prov. Diós me depáre meſón, que la huéſpeda me hága algo, y el hueſped non: God ſend me to an inn where the hoſteſs may be ſome kin to me, and not the hoſt. The ſame is otherwiſe expreſs'd: Allà me lléve dios a eſſe meſón, do ſéa de la hueſpéda, y del huéſped no: God carry me to that inn that belongs to the hoſteſs, and not to the hoſt. Both tend to the ſame, which is, that a man may be entertain'd by the hoſteſs, who is commonly kinder and neater than the hoſt.

Prov. Diós te de ſalúd y gózo, y cáſa con corrál y pózo: God give you health and joy, and an houſe with a court and well. This proverb is a good prayer, wiſhing a man all happineſs, ſignify'd by health, and joy, and the conveniencies of life, denoted by a court-yard, which is an addition to a houſe, and makes it pleaſant; and a well, to have water plenty for all uſes.

Prov. Diós te guárde de párrafo de legíſta, y de infra de canoníſta, y de &c. de eſcriváno, y de récipe de médico: God keep you from the paragraph of a civilian, the infra of a canoniſt, the &c. of a notary of ſcrivener, and a phyſician's recipe or bill. This proverb is a good prayer for God to deliver a man from falling into the hands of lawyers of any ſorts, and of ſcriveners or phyſicians.

Prov. Diós te de biénes, y cáſa en que los éches: God give you goods, and an houſe to put them into. This is ſtill a good prayer made proverbial.

Prov. Diós te de podér en villa, y en tu cáſa harína: God give you power in a town, and meal in your houſe. That is, tho' you be in authority and command, may you have a ſubſtance of your own, which is ſignified by meal, that you may not altogether rely upon your employment, and perhaps be induced to ill practices, if it be not ſuch as will keep you in plenty.

Prov. Diós me de contiénda con quién me entiénda: God grant I may have to do or conteſt with thoſe that underſtand me. That is, God grant I may converſe or contend, or have any dealings with men of ſenſe and underſtanding, who are capable of reaſon, and not with dull brutes, who are incapable of reaſon.

Prov. Diós te de páſcua buéna, y las ochávas en la cadéna: God give you good holy days, and the octave in a goal. This is a reflection on thoſe that will fare well, and ſpend much money upon holydays, tho' they run in debt, and be carried to priſon as ſoon as they are over.

Prov. Diós díxo lo que ſerá: God ſaid what will be. That is, only God can tell what will be hereafter. To ſhow the folly of thoſe, who think by aſtrology, or even by ſorcery, to dive into futurity; whereas there is nothing ſo certain, as that God alone knows what is to come.

Prov. Diós deſavénga quién nos manténga: God grant ſome may fall out, that they may maintain us. This is a prayer of lawyers, wiſhing for diſcord, that law-ſuits may enſue; and of ſurgeons, that people may fall out and wound one another, to make work for them.

Prov. Diós no cóme ni béve, mas júſga lo que vée: God does neither eat nor drink, but he judges what he ſees. A chriſtian proverb, to put us in mind that God ſees all things, and is an impartial and immortal judge of all our actions.

Prov. Diós conſiénte, mas no ſiempre: God bears, but not always. To ſignify, ſy, that tho' God is mercíful, and bears a long time, yet his revenge or juſtice will come at laſt, and perhaps when we leaſt expect it.

Prov. Diós hára mercéd. Y aún tres días ſin comer: God will provide. And I ſhall faſt three days longer. A proverb in two parts. The firſt ſhows, that he who wants for nothing, comforts one that is ſtarving with the hopes that God will provide for him, without ſtretching out his own hand to relieve him; and the other, as in deſpair, anſwers, And I ſhall faſt three days longer. That is, you ſee me ſtarve, and will not relieve me, and you comfort me with that proviſion which may come after I am dead.

Prov. Diós pága a quién en málos páſſos ánda: God requites thoſe that follow ill courſes. It needs no explaining, for God's juſtice ſooner or later overtakes all wicked men.

Prov. Diós nos de múcho pan y mála coſécha: God give us much corn, and a bad harveſt. This is the prayer of wicked farmers, who would every one have a great deal of corn themſelves, and a bad harveſt for all the reſt, that they might ſell theirs dear, tho' others ſtarve. This prayer is too frequent among us, where one of the greateſt grievances is a plentiful harveſt.

Prov. Diós no ſe quéxa, mas lo ſúyo no dexa: God does not complain, but he quits not his own. That is, God, who is almighty, does not like man complain of the offences done him; but, tho' he is ſilent, he does not quit the right he has to puniſh, which he executes at his own time.

Prov. Diós es el que ſána, y el médico lleva la pláta: It is God that cures, and the phyſician has the money. All health is from God, but ſome men when they recover of a ſickneſs give all the glory to the phyſician, without remembring God, or giving him thanks for preſerving them.

Prov. Diós ayúda a los mal veſtídos: God helps thoſe that are ill clad. All the world is ready to ſerve and aſſiſt thoſe that are well clad, that is, thoſe who want for nothing, but the poor, the diſtreſs'd, ſignified by thoſe that are ill clad, have none but God to help them.

Prov. De diós el médio: Half of God. This is an expreſſion of ill chriſtians, who will ſerve God by halves, or take one half of his precepts, and ſo give the other half of their life to the devil. It is alſo a profane expreſſion, to ſignify how great a thief a man is, by ſaying, He will ſteal half of God himſelf.

Prov. Diós y vída compónen vílla: God and life make up a town. That is, with the aſſiſtance of God and the help of living creatures, towns and cities are made.

Prov. Diós nos dió el rey de las ránas: God gave us the king of the frogs. This they ſay, when people could not be ſatisfy'd when they were well, and therefore run themſelves into misfortunes. The fable of the frogs and their king is well known.

Prov. Diós te líbre de íra de ſeñór, y de albcróto de puéblo, y de juégo de eſparténa: God deliver you from the anger of a great man, from a mutiny of the people, and the play or ſport of a buſkin made of eſparto. The firſt two are obvious enough, and their danger well known, but the laſt only ſignifies the unlucky tearing of thoſe buskins when a man travels with them, and ſo is left bare-foot. Covarrubias makes this laſt out better, and ſays it is, God deliver you from falling into contempt, and having the rabble throw old buskins, or old ſhoes at you.

Prov. Diós te líbre de hómbre de un líbro: God deliver you from a man of one book. That is, that knows but one book; becauſe he has read it often, and having it in his head, always tires and torments you with it.

Prov. A diós rogándo, y con el máço dándo: Praying to God, and laying on with the beetle. That is, our prayers to God muſt be accompanied with our endeavours. We muſt not lie down in the ditch, and cry God help us.

Prov. A quién diós quiére bién la cáſa le ſabe: God knows the houſes of thoſe he loves. That is, when God pleaſes to beſtow his mercies, he ſoon finds out thoſe perſons he thinks fit to receive them, tho' never ſo obſcure.

Prov. Créo en diós, y no en púta viéja cómo vos: I believe in God, and not in ſuch an old whore as you. Plain enough, and needs no more expoſition.

Prov. Mas vále a quién diós ayúda, que quién múcho madrúga: He is better whom God helps, than he that riſes early. That is, all our endeavours without God's bleſſing do not turn to account. According to the pſalm, Niſi dominus ædificaverit domum, &c.

Prov. Hagote porqué me hágas, que no éres diós que me válgas: I do you a good turn that you may do me another, for you are no God that can ſupport me. That is, one good turn deſerves another. God only is to be ſerved for his own ſake.

Prov. A diós te dóy libréta, y bevída por hilár: God take you, pound (of flax) drank out and not ſpun. This is for thoſe who ſpend the money before the work is done, and then curſe the work, calling it working for a dead horſe. The ſtory is, that an old woman being pay'd beforehand for ſpinning a pound of flax, ſhe drank out the money, and every time ſhe went to ſpin cry'd out, God take you, but meant the devil take the pound of flax, becauſe the price of ſpinning was ſpent before.

Prov. Allá me lléve diós a morár, do un huévo vále un real: God ſend me to live where an egg is worth a groat. That is, God grant I may live in a rich country; for where there is plenty of money all things are dear, proportionably, and there the moſt money is to be got, and there is the beſt living.

Prov. Andá con diós, y con romadízo, la piérna quebráda, y el quadríl ſalído: God go with you, and a running cold, a broken leg, and the bone ſticking out. A back prayer, but commonly ſpoke in jeſt.

Prov. A quién diós quiére bién en Sevílla le dió de comér: Him that God loves well, he gives him whereon to live in Sevil. That is, they are beloved by God who can live in that city. This is a proverb made by the admirers of Sevil, as others ſay, Quién no ha víſto a Sevílla, no ha víſto maravílla: He that has not ſeen Sevil, has ſeen no wonder. And of Madrid, De Madrid al ciélo: From Madrid to heaven. As if it were ſo fine a place, that a man ought to covet to ſee nothing after it.

Prov. A quién diós quiére bién la pérra le páre lechónes. The man whom God loves, his bitch brings forth pigs. That is, where God's bleſſing is, all things turn to a man's advantage.

Prov. Buéno, buéno, buéno, mas guárde diós mi búrra de ſu centéno: Good, good, good, but God keep my aſs out of his rye. That is, ſuch an one is a very good man every body ſays, becauſe no body tries to touch him in the ſenſible part of his goods; therefore ſays the country-man, God keep my aſs out of his rye; for if ſhe gets in, and eats but a mouthful, as good as he is, he'll put her in the pound, and me to trouble.

Prov. A tuérto y a derécho ayúde diós a nuéſtro concéjo: Right or wrong, God help our council. A ſaying of obſtinate men of no conſcience, who would have God proſper their undertakings, tho' never ſo unjuſt. This is ſaid to ſuch men, when they pray for ſucceſs to ill deſigns.

Prov. Da diós álas a la hormíga, pára que ſe piérda mas aýna: God gives the ant wings that ſhe may periſh the ſooner. That is, God raiſes up baſe men, that they may have the greater fall. Tvlluntur in altum, ut lapſu graviore ruant.

Prov. Da diós alméndras a quién no tiéne muélas: God gives almonds to thoſe that have no teeth. Alſo, Da diós hábas a quién no tiéne quixadas: God gives beans to thoſe that have no jaws. They are two proverbs to the ſame effect, and ſignify, that God gives plenty and riches to thoſe that have not the heart to do good with them.

Prov. De diós viéne el bién, de las abéjas miél: All good comes from God, and honey from the bees. This is a pious proverb, to put us in mind, that whatever bleſſings we receive, come from the hand of God.

Prov. De al me véngue diós, que del paſtór água y niéve: God give me revenge of others, for the ſnow and rain will revenge me upon the ſhepherd. Theſe were the words of a gentleman, who, being wronged by his ſhepherd, was adviſed to puniſh him, and anſwer'd with this proverb, as thinking the hardſhips the poor ſhepherd endured were puniſhment enough for him. And this is a chriſtian ſaying, to leave it to God to puniſh the rich that offend us, and for the poor to think their own ſufferings are puniſhment enough.

Prov. De diós hablár, y del múndo obrár: To talk of God, and act worldly. This we ſee practiſed daily, and needs no explaining; it anſwers to a wolf in ſheeps cloathing.

Prov. De lo féo a lo hermoſo, déme diós lo provechóſo: Of the beautiful or ugly God give me that which is profitable. That is, I value not beauty or deformity, but profit. As when a man refuſes a beautiful poor wife for one that is ugly and rich.

Prov. De aquélla me déxe diós comér, que déxa los pollos, y comiénça a ponér: God give me to eat of her that leaves the chickens, and begins to lay. This is only wiſhing for a pullet with eggs, that is, one that is paſt being reckon'd among chickens, and begins to be with egg.

Prov. Díze al doliénte el ſáno, Diós te de ſalúd hermáno: He that is well ſays to the ſick man, God give you health, brother. This proverb declares we are free enough of our good wiſhes, and therefore they uſe it when one refuſes to give an alms, and only ſays to a poor man, God help you; for we are ready enough to give good wiſhes, but not to open our purſes.

Prov. E'cbe diós água que hécho eſtádo cáya: God ſend rain, for the place is made for it to fall on. So ſays the countryman when he has ſow'd; and it is apply'd in all other caſes where a man has diſpoſed all things for ſucceſs, and now only prays for God's bleſſing to his endeavours.

Prov. E'ſſo ſe háze lo que a diós pláze: That is done which pleaſes God. That is, we may be ſatisfy'd that what God ordains will be.

Prov. Fiár de diós ſóbre buéna prénda: To truſt in God upon good ſecurity. This the poor ſay the rich do, who put their truſt in God, becauſe they have good eſtates for their ſecurity.

Prov. Guárdete diós de hécho es: God keep you from it is done. That is, God deliver us from evils that are done and cannot be recall'd, becauſe what is done cannot be undone.

Prov. Guárdete diós del diáblo, de ójo de raméra, y buélta de dádo: God defend you from the devil, the eye of an harlot, and the turn of a dye. This is a prayer for ſoul, body, and purſe; the words are plain enough, and need no expoſition.

Prov. Guardádo es lo que diós guárda: That is well kept which God keeps. Nothing is ſafe but what God ſecures, according to that of the pſalmiſt, Niſi dominus cuſtodierit civitatem, fruſtrá vigilat qui cuſtodit eam.

Prov. Hízonos diós y maravillámonos nos: God made us, and we admire at it. That is, we do not underſtand the great works of God, and yet we are proud and vain, and inſtead of praiſing him for his works, endeavour to pry into them, and dive into his ſecrets.

Prov. Lo que diós da llevárſe ha: What God gives muſt be born. There is no oppoſing the will of God, and if he gives troubles, they muſt be born with patience. What can't be cur'd muſt be endur'd.

Prov. Mas puéde diós ayudár, que velár, ni madrugár: God can help more than watching or riſing early. The bleſſing of God is beyond all human endeavours.

Prov. Mas vále táque, táque, que diós os ſalve: Taque, taque, is better than God ſave you. Taque, taque, here ſignifies the noiſe of the hammer knocking at a ſtreet door, and the proverb means, it is better there ſhould be knocking at your door, than that any body ſhould come into your houſe unknown, till he ſays God ſave you.

Prov. Miénte mas que da por diós: He lyes more than he gives for God's ſake. This is to denote a great liar, or one that makes no conſcience of what he ſays.

Prov. No te de diós mas mál, que múchos híjos y póco pan: God give you no greater curſe than many children and little bread. This is miſery enough, and ſo plain as not to want expounding.

Prov. No de diós a nuéſtros amígos tánto bién que nos deſconóſcan: May it pleaſe God not to make our friends ſo happy, as that they may not know us. This is too frequent in the world, and therefore the proverb is good, to pray they may not have ſo much as to forget themſelves; as we daily ſee men puffed up with their fortunes, who then refuſe to know their beſt friends.

Prov. No hízo diós a quién deſampárar: God made none to forſake them. Tho' never ſo low or unfortunate, God's providence is over all, and he takes care of the leaſt, as well as the greateſt, if they confide in him.

Prov. No hiére Diós con dos mános, que a la mar hízo puértos, y a los ríos vádos: God does not wound with both hands, for he made ports to the ſea and fords to the rivers. That is, God does not ſend calamities without ſome comforts, he lays not on his ſtrokes with both hands, that is, to ſink us under them; but as there are ports to the raging ſea, and fords in rapid rivers, ſo there are ſome means of comfort or relief in the greateſt ſorrows or diſtreſs.

Prov. Pléga a Díos que náſca el peregíl en el áſcua: God grant the pirſley may grow in the fire. This they ſay when they wiſh ſome good may be made of ſome great misfortune.

Prov. Quándo Diós quiére con tódos viéntos lluéve: When God pleaſes it rains with all winds. That is, when God pleaſes any the moſt unlikely things turn to our advantage.

Prov. Quándo no tenía dávate, agóra que téngo no te daré, ruéga a Díos que no ténga, porqué te de: When I had not I gave you, now I have I will not give you; pray to God I may not have that I may give you. Theſe are the words of a covetous man, or rather of one upbraiding ſuch a perſon, and ſignifies, ſignifies, when I had not, that is, when I had little, I gave ſome of that little; now I have, that is, much, I will give none, for avarice is moſt prevalent on thoſe that have moſt, therefore we ought to pray to God that he would reſtore ſuch a one to his poverty, that he might be reſtor'd to his charity.

Prov. Quándo Díos quería, allénde la bárba eſcupía, agóra que no puédo, eſcúpome aquí luégo: When it pleaſed God I us'd to ſpit beyond my beard, now I cannot do ſo, I ſpit here cloſe by. Literally theſe are the words of an antient man who cannot ſpit from him, but ſays he could when he was young, and muſt now be ſatisfy'd to do as he can. But metaphorically they are us'd by any that have been rich or in power, and are fallen to a low condition, who thus expreſs that when they were in their flouriſhing eſtate, they did what they pleas'd, but now they do what they can.

Prov. Qual Diós te hízo tal te apiáde: As God made you ſo may he have compaſſion of you. This they ſay to a natural, or any other that cannot help himſelf, praying to God that ſince he has made him ſo wretched, he will accordingly provide for him.

Prov. Diós proveerá, mas buén haz de pája ſe querrá: God will provide, but he will expect a good truſs of ſtraw for himſelf. Theſe are literally the words of a brutal clown grudging God his offering or tythes, but apply'd to any one who receives much and grudges to make a ſmall return or acknowledgment out of it.

Prov. Quándo Diós no quiére el ſánto no puédé: When God will not the ſaint cannot. That is, when God has decreed otherwiſe, the ſaints to whom we pray for interceſſion cannot alter the decree. There is no ſtriving againſt the will of God.

Prov. Quál éra Diós pára mercadér: What a good ſhopkeeper or merchant God would make. That is, how would any one thrive that knew what was to come, as God goes.

Prov. Quándo Diós quiére en ſeréno llueve: When God pleaſes it rains in fair weather. That is, tho' all appear never ſo calm or proſperous, if God pleaſes he can raiſe ſudden ſtorms, or overthrow our proſperity.

Prov. Quién bién eſtá, y mal búſca, ſi mal le viene, Diós le ayúda: He that is well and ſeeks to be ill, if ill befall him, God helps him. That is, God grants him what he ſought for, tho' it be to his loſs, for God often gives a man that for his puniſhment, which he ſought after for his ſatisfaction.

Prov. Quién ſiémbra en Diós eſpéra: He that ſows hopes in God. So in all other things when a man uſes his endeavours he hopes God will give a bleſſing.

Prov. Quién no hábla Diós no le óye: God does not hear him who does not ſpeak, without a man makes known his wants or his deſires, he cannot expect to be reliev'd; therefore theſe words are in common uſe to thoſe who ſay they have long wanted any thing yet did not ſpeak before.

Prov. Quién yérra, y ſe enmiénda, a Diós ſe encomiénda: He that commits a fault and mends, recommends himſelf to God. That is, as frail men we commit faults, but if we endeavour to amend, God's mercy accepts of that ſign of our repentance, and the very amendment is a ſort of prayer to God.

Prov. Quién ſe múda Diós le ayúda: He that removes God helps him. This may be taken in a ſuperſtitious ſenſe, as if removing from one place to another did alter a man's fortune; but the true meaning is that generally people remove to better themſelves, for we do ſeldom go from one place to another but upon ſome proſpect of advantage or ſatisfaction.

Prov. Quién ſe guárda, Diós le guárda: God keeps him that keeps himſelf. That is, if a man takes care to keep himſelf out of danger, it is likely God will keep him from their ill conſequences. We muſt not run our ſelves into needleſs dangers out of a vain confidence in God.

Prov. Quién de los ſúyos ſe alexa, Diós le déxa: God forſakes him that removes far from his friends. It means that friends and relations are more likely to do for a man than ſtrangers. This proverb is good in Spain, where kindred never fail to help one another, but in England where this is little practis'd, it is of no value, for here only thoſe are a-kin to the rich who are as well to paſs as they, the poor relations are diſown'd and caſt off.

Prov. Rogámos a Diós por ſántos, mas no por tántos: We pray'd to God for ſaints, but not for ſo many. Literally a ſaying of poor labouring people, when too many holydays come, on which they muſt not work. But apply'd in any other caſe, when things come too faſt. Too much of one thing is good for nothing.

Prov. Si Diós quiſiére, y Juán viniére, echarémos a Pedro de cáſa: If God pleaſes, and John comes, we'll turn Peter out of doors. That is, if we can get a better ſervant, we'll turn away a worſe. Or in any other ſenſe, If it pleaſes God to furniſh us with what is better, we will fare better.

Prov. Si Diós de aquí me levánta; mañána hilaré úna manta. Sol y día buéno, que manta. O que duélo: If it pleaſe God I riſe to morrow I'll ſpin a blanket. The ſun ſhines and 'tis a fair day, what need of a blanket, or where's the grief. An old woman being very cold in her bed, promis'd if ſhe liv'd till the next day to ſpin for a blanket, but the ſun ſhining and feeling her ſelf warm the next day, ſhe did not care for ſpinning, and thought there was no need of a blanket. This is apply'd to all people who in their diſtreſs make fair promiſes, and perform nothing, when they are deliver'd from them. We ſay, they are vows made in ſtorms, forgot as ſoon as it is calm.

Prov. Válate Diós Pedro. No tal, que el áſno es récio: God help you Peter. No need, for the aſs is ſtrong: A good man ſeeing an aſs run away with a country-fellow, cry'd, God help you, fearing he might fall. There's no need, ſays the clown, for the aſs is ſtrong. Apply'd to thoſe who are grown rich and great, and when men ſay, God help them, are ſo proud that they think they do not ſtand in need of God.

Prov. Vínole Diós a ver ſin campanílla, God came to ſee him without a bell. This they ſay when a man has any great happineſs befalls him unexpected, they ſay, God came to ſee him, that is, with a bleſſing, and without a bell, becauſe when the bleſſed ſacrament is carry'd to dying men, which is God going to viſit them, there goes a bell before to give notice.

Prov. Quiéra Diós Matéa, que éſte híjo muéſtro ſéa: God grant Matthea this be our ſon. This is the prayer of a countryman who marry'd a wife and ſhe was brought to bed at ſix months end, which made him miſtruſt the child was not his, but a phyſician who had got it perſuaded him, he was more than other men, who could get a child in ſix months, yet the doubt remaining in his head he ſtill ſaid, God grant the child be ours. This is applicable in all ſorts of doubts, but moſt us'd when men boaſt of actions or works, which we miſtruſt are not their own, for then this proverb is well apply'd to them. We have a blunt ſaying, I pray God you be John, not unlike it, and taken from a wench who had a man in bed with her, and much doubted whether it was her real ſweet-heart.

Prov. Deſpués de Dios la olla: Next to God the olla, that is, the pot of boil'd meat and ſoupe, which the Spaniards are ſo great admirers of that it caus'd this ſaying.

Los diſlátes de Juan de la Enzina: The abſurdities of John de la Enzina. This John de la Enzina was a very learned man in Salamanca, who compos'd a ſort of doggrel rhimes extraordinary ingenious, but ſo contriv'd that they ſound like abſurdities, under which much wit and judgment is couch'd. Theſe took ſo well with all ſorts of people, that many other ſerious things he compos'd were loſt, and it remain'd a proverb when any body ſpeaks abſurdly, to ſay, they are the abſurdities of John de la Enzina. He being upon a journey the inn-keeper's wife heard the ſervants name their maſter John de la Enzina, whereupon ſhe ſtept up to him, and gazing in his face, ſaid, Sir, was it you that compos'd the abſurdities. At which he was much out of countenance and gave her ſome hard words, wherein he was guilty of the greateſt abſurdity.

ECLIPSA'DO, eclipſed.

ECLIPSA'R, to eclipſe.

ECLÍPSE, an eclipſe of the ſun or moon. The firſt cauſed by the moon's interpoſing betwixt him and us, which hides the light from us. The latter by the earth's interpoſing betwixt the ſun and moon, which deprives the moon of the light ſhe receives from the ſun, and ſo ſhe becomes dark. So the firſt happens by the conjunction of the two planets, and the latter by oppoſition. So called from the Greek ecleipo, to fail.

ECLÍPSIS is alſo a figure in rhetorick, when ſome word lies obſcure to be underſtood.

ECLÍPTICO, belonging to the eclipſes.

ECLÍPTICA línea, the ecliptick line, on which the ſun finiſhes his yearly motion; ſo called, becauſe the eclipſes both of the ſun and moon happen, when the moon either in conjunction or oppoſition is under this line. This line cuts the zodiack in two.

ECO

E'CO, an eccho, or the rebound of the laſt part of the voice, or other ſound, return'd in valleys, or hollow places, cauſed by the ſound meeting with oppoſition, which makes it return as a ball does. In poetry écho is a ſort of verſe, in which the laſt part of the laſt word is repeated, as the natural eccho does words, as in theſe verſes of our Saviour:

El mas querído y inflamádo, amádo,
Puéſto en el dúro y ſin conſuélo, ſuélo,
Súfre por mi de tiérra y ciélo, yélo,
En un peſébre deſechádo, echádo.

Prov. Múchos híjos y póco pan conténto con afrán: Many children and little bread are a ſatisfaction with great care and anxiety. Poor people are pleaſed to have children, but muſt labour hard to maintain them.

Prov. Al híjo de tu vezína, quitále el móco, y cáſale con tu híja: Wipe your neighbour's ſon's noſe, and marry him to your daughter. That is, you had better take a neighbour you know with his faults, than a ſtranger you do not know.

Prov. Cáſa el híjo quándo quiſiéres, y la híja quándo pudiéres: Marry your ſon when you pleaſe, and your daughter when you can. That is, your ſon may get a wife at any time, but your daughter muſt be married when you can give her a portion.

Prov. Cáſa tu híjo con tu iguál, y no dirán de ti mál: Marry your ſon to your equal, and they will not ſpeak ill of you. Becauſe if you marry him above his quality, he is ſubject to be henpeck'd, and then to be laugh'd at.

Prov. A bién te ſálgan híjo tus barraganádas: God ſend no harm comes, ſon, of your youthful boldneſs. This they ſay a father ſaid to his ſon, who from an high window was braving a dead bull, and it is uſed as a ſcoff to thoſe that brave it, and talk great, far from any danger.

Prov. Da a tu híjo mal por mal, dexárlo has al hoſpitál: Give your ſon evil for evil, and you'll leave him to the hoſpital That is, i you turn out a ſon becauſe he is lewd, and diſinherit him, he muſt come to beggary, or, what is worſe, to the gallows.

Prov. De híjos y de cordéros los cámpos llénos: Of ſons and lambs the fields full. That is, no matter how many ſons, and how much cattel a man has, ſo he has not many daughters.

Prov. Híjo éres y padre ſerás, qual hizíéres tal auras: You are a ſon, and will be a father; as you act, ſo you will find. That is, if you are not dutiful to your parents, you'll have the curſe of undutiful children; or the contrary.

Prov. Dónde áy híjos, ni pariéntes, ni amígos: Where there are ſons, there are neither kindred nor friends. That is, kindred nor friends are not regarded in compariſon of a man's own children.

Prov. El híjo del mezquíno, póco pan y múcho vício: The miſer's ſon eats little bread, but is very vicious. That is, he eats little of his father's bread; for the covetous man values not what courſes his children take, provided they be no charge to him.

Prov. El híjo ſábe que conóze a ſu pádre: It is a wiſe child that knows its father.

Prov. El híjo bórde y la múla cáda día házen úna: The baſtard ſon and the mule do one every day. That is, do ſome unlucky trick; becauſe mules are generally vicious, and baſtard ſons for the moſt part ill bred.

Prov. El híjo del hidálgo un pié deſcálço, y el ótro calçádo: A gentleman's ſon with one foot ſhod and the other bare. That is, tho' he be ſo poor that he has ſcarce ſhooes to his feet, yet he is reſpected as a gentleman; which is practiſed in Spain, but not in England.

Prov. El híjo muérto, y el ápio en el huérto: The ſon dead, and the parſley in the garden. That is, it was found out when he was dead, and they wanted it for ſome medicine whilſt he was living. Anſwerable to, after meat muſtard, or, a day after the fair.

Prov. El híjo hárto y rompído, la híja hambriénta y veſtída: The ſon well fed and ragged, the daughter hungry and well clad. That is, keep them ſo. The ſon muſt be kept in full vigour, and no matter what cloaths he wears; the daughter muſt rather pinch her belly, than want good cloaths.

Prov. Híjo tardáno huerfáno tempráno: A late ſon is ſoon an orphan. That is, he that is born in his father's old age.

Prov. Híjo no tenémos, y nómbre le pon mos: We have no ſon, and we give him a name. That is, we reckon our chickens before they are hatch'd.
